

'Last' Island N-Test

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Atomic Energy Commission's five-megaton weapons test this fall will be its last on Alaska's Amchitka Island, suggesting that the "Cannikin" test is the only underground weapons test the United States plans in the multi-megaton range.

"After the successful completion of Cannikin the AEC intends to vacate Amchitka," the AEC says in the draft of a 40-page environmental statement to the White House. "Beyond successful completion of Cannikin, the AEC does not have any plans for future underground nuclear testing on Amchitka, although this does not preclude such plans should a future need arise."

ONLY ONE

Scheduled for the first week of October, Cannikin is understood to be a test of an enlarged version of the warhead for the Spartan ABM missile. The fact that the AEC plans only one such test, raises several questions about future testing plans and the size of Spartan warheads.

Cannikin is being conducted in Alaska because Amchitka is the only place the AEC feels it can safely detonate weapons as large as five megatons. Its regular testing grounds in Nevada are too close to Reno, Las Vegas and Salt Lake City to test weapons larger than one or two megatons.

ALL IT NEEDS

"It's possible the AEC plans to escalate the Nevada tests from one to two megatons," one source close to the AEC said. "On the other hand, it might simply mean that the AEC feels it can get everything it needs out of one megaton tests."

It could also mean that the AEC feels it can no longer afford the luxury of the Amchitka test site. Cannikin will be the third nuclear test (the others were Long Shot and Milrow) on Amchitka, and while the AEC will not break down the costs of the three shots, it admits it will have spent $190 million on the island by the time it cleans up after the Cannikin test.

KILL WILDLIFE

In the drafted version of its environmental report, the AEC denies Cannikin will trigger large secondary earthquakes or submarine tidal waves but does admit that it will damage the 42-mile-long island and possibly kill off some of its wildlife.

The most controversial part of the environmental statement is sure to be the AEC's discussion of how much radiation will leak from the test site into the ocean, and when this leakage will take place. "Most likely," the AEC claims, ground water contaminated by radiation will take 1,000 years to find its way into the Bering Sea, by which time the radioactivity will have been largely dissipated.

RADIATED WATER

A second and "less probable" mechanism, the AEC says, will release the radiated water to the sea in 100 years, and a third mechanism, which the AEC says is "very unlikely," will discharge contaminated water into the sea three years after the test.

If this takes place, the AEC contends, radiated water will be discharged from the test site into the ocean for the next 130 years. The water would be 1,200 times more radioactive at the time of its first discharge than water containing the maximum safe concentrations of radiation.

The worst damage Cannikin will do to Amchitka, the AEC said, will be to leave a "subsidence crater" above the explosion site that is 10 to 100 feet deep and as much as 4,000 feet across.

TRUDEAU MEET, KISS AT RECEPTION

'Pierre, This is Margaret!'

By JOHN MIKA

MOSCOW — Prime Minister Trudeau shook hands with his wife Margaret when they unexpectedly met in a receiving line between functions inside the Kremlin Tuesday, and then he leaned over and kissed her.

It was a welcome bit of reassurance for his bride who had her baptism of state duties at three engagements in the afternoon and evening. Throughout each event she carried on the great tradition of Canada's prime ministerial wives — tense but trying hard.

MIDI STYLE

In a beige midi dress, she went to the Kremlin for a 1½-hour luncheon thrown by Soviet Prime Minister Alexei Kosygin for the Trudeaus and team of Canadian officials involved in the first session of talks between the two leaders that morning.

She was introduced, along with the other Canadian VIPs, to the host's array of luminaries at a pre-luncheon reception. It included the world's only woman astronaut, Valentina Tereshkova, who was dressed in a green suit and was at her genial and relaxed best.

Mrs. Trudeau posed for pictures with the astronaut but throughout appeared to be shy and slightly nervous.

Another reception line was formed as the party was to enter the dining room for lunch and Mrs. Trudeau wound up in the line-up along with the wife of Canadian ambassador in Moscow Robert Ford.

Among those presented to her was her own husband. That's when he kissed her.

FIRST MISSION

Later in the afternoon, Mrs. Trudeau carried out her first state mission alone.

She presented copies of Canadian films and recordings to the Palace of Pioneers, a talent development and recreational centre for pioneers who are about Boy Scout and Girl Guide age.

In the evening, she switched from beige to white but stuck to the midi length in her gown for the special performance of Swan Lake at the Bolshoi Theatre.

In the more formal surroundings of the huge central box the Trudeaus shared with Kosygin and his wife and a party of dignitaries of both nationalities, Mrs. Trudeau looked less vulnerable with the spotlight on the two men.

In fact, she looked no more self-conscious than Kosygin who sat beside her while her husband and Kosygin's wife made a more relaxed pair and were more casual about the sea of staring eyes surrounding them.

KOSTER

General Demoted

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — The United States Army demoted a general Wednesday and severely disciplined another for not conducting a proper investigation into the massacre of civilians at My Lai, South Vietnam, three years ago.

Maj-Gen. Samuel Koster, head of the 11th Infantry Division at the time of the atrocity, was reduced to brigadier-general.

He was also stripped of his Distinguished Service Medal and had a letter of censure placed in his personal file.

Brig-Gen. George Young, Koster's deputy at the time of the massacre, was also stripped of his Distinguished Service Medal and had a letter of censure placed in his file.

Without warrants in cases concerning the distribution of beer and liquor.

The report recommended that the Quebec Liquor Board be abolished and replaced by two separate bodies.

One of these would be an alcoholic beverage control board which would issue licences to sell beer, wine and spirits, and would be responsible for the operation of bars and licensed restaurants.

The second body, a Quebec liquor corporation, would sell beer, wines and spirits.

Canada-USSR Pact Struck

MOSCOW (UPI) — Canada and the Soviet Union signed an agreement today calling for mutual consideration of vital foreign affairs, Canadian officials said.

The Soviet Union and Canada both have similar agreements with other countries. However, this is only the second time the Soviets have signed such an agreement with a non-Communist nation.

"We do not consider it a major breakthrough," one high-ranking Canadian source said. "It is important, but they (the Soviets) are describing it in superlatives."

'SOMETHING GOOD'

"I think that we have done something good today," Premier Alexei Kosygin declared.

Canadian sources also said the Soviet leaders called the agreement "historical and monumental."

The document was signed by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and Kosygin in a special ceremony at a luxurious Lenin Hills reception villa.

In addition to arranging for "regular consultations on important international problems," a key paragraph of the protocol says:

"In the event of a situation arising which, in the opinion of the two governments, endangers the maintenance of peace or involves a breach of the peace, the two governments will make contact without delay in order to exchange views on what might be done to improve the situation."

YEARLY MEETINGS

The text of the protocol said the consultations would be held "every time the need of this shall arise, and in principle once a year at the least."

Other sections of the protocol say the agreements contain no effect on the obligations of Canada to her NATO agreements or the Soviet Union to its Warsaw Pact requirements.

NEWS BRIEFS

Defeat Admitted

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, (D-Wash.), chief Senate advocate of reviving the super-sonic transport program, acknowledged defeat today by agreeing that funds voted by the House for the project should be used to end the program instead.

The Senate vote on the SST was not expected until late today.

Lava Pace, Quickens

SANT'ALFIO, Sicily (Reuters) — A fiery river of lava, bearing down on this prosperous farming community from Mount Etna, picked up speed during the night and posed a new threat to village homes, police said today.

Street Battles

JERUSALEM (AP) — A hundred Jewish "Black Panthers," charging discrimination against Jewish immigrants from Africa and Asia, fought street battles for six hours Tuesday with police. Ten policemen and several demonstrators were injured in Israel's worst rioting in years.

First Round to Nixon In Troop Cut Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's forces scored a decisive victory Wednesday in rejecting the first in a series of Senate proposals to cut United States forces in Europe.

By an unexpectedly large margin of 63 to 26, the Senate defeated a proposal by Senator Gaylord Nelson (Dem. Wis.) for a phased 50-per-cent cut of the 300,000 U.S. troops over a three-year period unless East-West talks start promptly on the possibility of mutual withdrawals.

The heavy vote underscored the view of White House backers they would be able to block all moves for a unilateral U.S. troop reduction.

INSIDE THE TIMES

● Finance Minister Edgar Benson rose to the defence of the Trudeau government's economic policies Tuesday, saying continuing high salary increases are renewing the spectre of galloping inflation and heightening the threat to Canada's economic stability. His remarks in the Commons were aimed at New Democrats who argued Ottawa should spend any money necessary to increase employment, regardless of the inflation threat. See Page 26.

● Ottawa fiscal policy came under fire from another quarter as well, as rebel Liberal MP Paul Hellyer, who resigned from the cabinet two years ago, called for mandatory price and wage controls as the only way to get the economy back on the road to full employment while keeping prices in check. See Page 18.

● The rebirth of the Sunro Mine at Jordan River has stirred controversy over the mine's application to the Pollution Control Board to dump one million gallons annually of mine tailings into the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

● Times Business Editor G. S. Kent surveyed the mine and on Page 9 gives the company's side of the issue — especially plans to meet some of the objections.

U.S. Rail Strike Ended by Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The giant U.S. rail system began struggling off effects of a two-day paralysis today and started moving tired commuters to their jobs and materials to factories.

Members of the 13,000-member AFL-CIO Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen, which had immobilized the rail system before Congress broke the coast-to-coast strike by passing legislation Tuesday, began removing pickets from terminals and freight yards shortly after President Nixon signed the law ending the walkout.

Union President C. J. Chamberlain notified strikers shortly before midnight Tuesday night the walkout was over and ordered them back to their jobs.

The Penn Central reported freight trains were rolling again within an hour of Nixon's decree. Other railways said they would resume service as the day progressed.

Labor Secretary James Hodgson said it probably would be 24 hours before full service was in effect, but Chamberlain said restoration "should be well along by morning."

Tighter Control, Easier Access

LIQUOR REFORM CALL

QUEBEC (CP) — New measures to fight underworld control over Quebec's bars and taverns and allow easier access to alcoholic beverages were recommended Tuesday by a royal commission.

The commission recommended that new administrative bodies for liquor and beer sales be independent from the government to avoid political favoritism.

It also suggested sale of beer in supermarkets.

The commission was established in 1968. The commission recommended that all bar employees obtain compulsory work identification cards. Unless those with criminal records could prove they had reformed, they should lose their jobs.

The "real owner" of a bar or hotel, rather than front men, would have to obtain a liquor permit. The applicant would have to provide exact information about himself and all directors of his company.

WOULD AVOID WATER

To avoid watered-down drinks, liquor should be served, on request, in miniature bottles.

Municipal police throughout the province should be allowed to conduct raids

U.S. DEBT 'LOOP' MOON AND BACK

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. national debt is so big that it would make a 35-foot-wide ribbon of dollar bills that would loop around the moon and back.

Or girdle the equator 1,552 times. Or fill 3,456 box cars, enough to make a train 36 miles long. The only problem is that it would take 171 years to print the bills and all 100 U.S. Senators working non-stop for 64 years to count them all out.

Senate appropriations committee chairman Allen Ellender, D-La., brought out the figures in attempting to impress on his colleagues that the "stupendous sum" of the national debt, roughly $400 billion, should be reason enough to cut the $14 billion yearly, far exceeded the cost of maintaining 300,000 troops in Europe.

Record Crowd Welcomes Team

MONTREAL (UPI) — The largest crowd in the history of Montreal turned out during a victory parade today to welcome back the Montreal Canadiens fresh from clinching the National Hockey League championship over Chicago.

"How nice it is," said team captain Jean Beliveau as he sat in a convertible including its way down St. Catherine Street toward city hall. "We are very fortunate to win."

Police officially estimated the crowd lining the downtown area of Montreal at between 500,000 and 600,000, a quarter of the city's population, and the largest ever crowd to turn out for a parade.

FINAL GAME

Montreal clinched the Stanley Cup — the top award in professional hockey — Tuesday night when it beat the Chicago Black Hawks in the final contest of seven-game series. (See Page 10 for story.)

As the caravan of convertibles approached city hall for an address by Montreal Mayor Jean Drapeau, a 12-gun salute echoed in their honor.

In the lead car was the Stanley cup.

QUEEN SEEKS PAY HIKE

LONDON (UPI) — In an unprecedented move, Queen Elizabeth today asked her subjects for a pay raise. She did not specify how much.

"Her majesty regrets that developments in intervening years have made that provision inadequate for the maintenance of that standard of service to her people which she believes they wish her and her family to adhere," said the message to the House of Commons asking for a review of the civil list, the official name of the Queen's grant.

Author Refuses Michener Award

OTTAWA (CP) — One of six Canadian authors selected to receive Governor-General literary awards refused to accept the honor at a presentation made by Governor-General Roland Michener Tuesday.

Fernand Ouellette, 40, a CBC public affairs producer, gave political reasons for not accepting the award. He was selected for his collection of essays, Les Actes Retrouvés.

Writer-editor-publisher David Godfrey, 32, received an award for his novel, The New Ancestors, hailed by critics as a major development in Canadian literature.

A third novel chosen for the awards was La Femme de l'été by Monique Bosco, 43, a professor of French literature at the University of Montreal. Other awards went to:

—Jacques Brault, 37, professor of philosophy at the University of Montreal, for his play Quans Nous Serons Heureux.

—B. P. Nichol, 26, for three books of poems—Beach Head, Still Water, The True Eventual Story of Billy the Kid—as well as an anthology edited by him, The Cosmic Chef: An Evening in Concrete.

—Michael Ondaatje, 27, Ceylonese-born English teacher at the University of Western Ontario, London, Ont., for his book of prose and poetry The Collected Works of Billy the Kid.

—Robert Weaver of the CBC and editor of Tamarack Review was head of the selection committee's English-language jury. Ottawa writer Claire Martin headed the French-language panel.

Navy Divers Search For Missing Boater

Five navy divers from Colwood were searching today for the body of a Duncan man whose wife and two children died of exposure Sunday when their 12-foot boat apparently swamped in rough seas off Salt Spring Island.

Also joining in the search around Vesuvius Bay for Gary Henry Salter, 26, of 3324 Gibbons Road, was an RCMP 12-foot skiff, powered by a 9½ horsepower outboard.

Police have little hope that the man will be found alive.

An unemployed truck driver and mechanic, he and his family had been to Booth Bay on Salt Spring Island Sunday to gather clams for extra money.

The bodies of his wife, Yuet Han Patsy Salter and two children, Wai Sze Fong and Wai Kwok Fong, were found washed up on Vesuvius beach at 7:30 a.m. Monday.

There are two other children, four-month-old Collin Salter and Kai Sze Fong, two, who are staying with Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Windsor, 3264 Gibbons.

Salter and his family moved to Duncan on Prince George last summer.

ing age be lowered to 18, that closing time be 3 a.m. in all bars, and that women be allowed into certain taverns which would have restaurant status. The last move would give women their first legal access to draft beer in Quebec.

Retailers should be liable in civil law for all injuries to others caused by inebriated persons and by adolescents to whom they have sold alcohol illegally, the report said.

MORE OUTLETS

Small corner grocers should be allowed to sell wines as well as beer and supermarkets should be given permits to sell beer. The proposed Quebec Liquor Corporation would also sell imported and Canadian beer.

By extending the retail distribution system for beer the province could cut costs enough to allow it to increase the tax on the beverage while cutting the price to the consumer, the commission said.

Beer would be taxed at the rate of 20 per cent, an increase from the present 16 per cent. This would provide 35 cents a gallon in tax revenue or 63 cents tax on a case of 24 12-ounce bottles. The same quantities now are taxed at 29 cents and 51 cents.

The proposed Quebec Liquor Corporation could establish retail stores reserved for beer sales, the report says.

Such stores would ensure a more direct link between domestic brewers and the consumer, and would correspond to the 460 Brewers' Retail stores in Ontario where the cost of retailing 24 12-ounce bottles is 58 cents, compared with $1.70 in Quebec.

Foreign beers would be taxed at only 20 per cent instead of the present 73 per cent. Wines would be taxed at 50 per cent compared with the present 67 per cent tax. Spirits would be taxed at 65 per cent compared with the present rate of 76 per cent.

Bamfield Considered For Biology Centre

A team from the National Research Council in Ottawa looking into development of a marine biology centre at Bamfield completed a two-day study on the west coast Tuesday.

But word on whether the NRC will support the project with an $800,000 grant is not expected before mid-June.

Five western universities — Victoria, UBC, Simon Fraser, Alberta and Calgary — want to operate the research centre, to be based in the former cable station at Bamfield, the tiny fishing community on Vancouver Island's southwest coast.

The universities have already purchased 190 acres at the site, including 1.8 miles of shoreline flanking Grappler Inlet. The grant sought from the NRC is basically for equipment.

The six-man delegation representing the NRC was joined by representatives from all five universities in a visit to the site Monday. On Tuesday they met to discuss the project at UBC.

A marine biology centre for research at Bamfield would be the first of its kind on the west coast. There are already three on the east coast and Canada operates another in the Barbados.

SOCIETY FORMED

The universities have established the Western Canadian Universities Marine Biological Society to develop the project and the society's president is Richard Lester, chairman of the board of governors at Simon Fraser.

He said today the society is extremely fortunate because the concrete cable station building, almost 70 years old, is in excellent condition and will require only minor alterations to be converted to laboratories, seminar rooms and other academic facilities. Only some residence building is planned.

Lester said it's hoped the universities will have the centre operational by next summer. Some marine biology projects have already been undertaken at the site.

Haney People 'Lost Faith' In RCMP

VANCOUVER (CP) — The people in the Fraser Valley community of Haney have lost faith in the local RCMP detachment following a Boxing Day car crash which killed five members of one family, George Mussallem, Social Credit member of the B.C. legislature, said Tuesday.

"They feel something has been hushed up because an off-duty RCMP constable was involved in the accident," Mr. Mussallem, a Haney automobile dealer, said in an interview.

He was commenting on an investigation into the crash ordered Monday by Attorney-General Leslie Peterson.

Mr. Peterson instructed chief B.C. coroner Glen McDonald to examine all the evidence produced at a mid-January inquest into the two-car smash at Haney.

Saanich Clubs Take 4-H Prizes

For the second day in a row, Saanich clubs took top honors Tuesday in the Jaycee Fair 4-H competition.

Saanich Beef Club member Glenda Madrie won the aggregate trophy and first place in the intermediate quiz competition while the Saanich Jersey Club won the stall competition.

Champion showman was Brenda Madrie, while quiz winners were Jody Aylard, Vivian Kennedy, Leslie MacAnly junior, Glenda and Brenda Madrie, Marilyn MacAlly intermediate, Richard Muir and Diane Pendray (senior).

The signing of the agreement followed private consultations with Kosygin, Trudeau, and later, with Communist Party Chief Leonid I. Brezhnev.

FIRST LEADER

Trudeau, who arrived in Moscow with his wife Margaret and an official party Monday, was the first western government leader to meet either Kosygin or Brezhnev since the 24th Party Congress.

Trudeau also became the first Western leader to confer with Brezhnev since the party leader urged the West to start negotiating a reduction of forces in Europe.

Brezhnev in a speech last Friday opened a new dialogue on the subject of possible troop cut negotiations between Washington and Moscow.

Trudeau and Kosygin also discussed prospects for military disengagement at their first talks Tuesday and diplomatic sources said they would go into the matter in greater detail late today.

Their talks lasted one hour and 45 minutes, the sources said.

BREAKTHROUGH

They quoted Brezhnev as telling Trudeau he viewed the protocol on diplomatic consultations as a major and historic breakthrough in the relations between the two countries.

Following the signing of the protocol, which Canadian sources said would not need parliamentary ratification, the Canadian and Soviet parties attended a reception in the Kremlin St. George's Hall at which Canada's Ambassador John Ford was host.

Before the Judge

Michael James Illes, 17, of 56 Sims, was given a suspended sentence and placed on a one-year probation for possession of stolen property over $50.

The offence involved a 10-speed bicycle stolen in April from Mount View Senior Secondary.

Emil Charity, 45, of 882 Courtney, was sentenced to a total of 30 days in jail on a two-count Saanich charge of impaired driving and refusing to take breath-analysis test, and on charges of impaired driving and refusing to take the breath test in Colwood.

Charity was given 20 days with a six-month driving ban on the first Saanich count and fined $200 or 30 days on the second.

He was also given 30 days on the first Colwood count and fined $300 or 30 days on the second. All sentences were made concurrent.

We'll be glad to help with a $1000 Home Acquisition Grant or $5000 Second Mortgage Loan.

Go ahead and look around. We can make it easier for you to buy a new home of your choice or build one by providing an outright $1000 Home Acquisition Grant or a $5000 Second Mortgage Loan that may be used as part or all of your down payment.

To qualify: You must be the first occupant of the new home and must have lived in British Columbia for 12 months immediately preceding the date of purchase or completion of construction.

The Loan can equal but cannot exceed the difference between the cost of the property and the first mortgage. Previous British Columbia Government Annual Home-owner Grants will be deducted from the $1000 Grant, but not if you choose a Second Mortgage Loan.

Interest lower than on Federal N.H.A. first mortgages

If payments are made promptly there will be an annual refund of up to 10%, reducing the effective interest rate on a 25-year Second Mortgage Loan to 7½%. For example, the monthly payment on a $5000, 25-year Second Mortgage Loan is $41.00 but the 10% refund would in effect reduce this to $36.90.

All mortgages Fully Insured—without extra charge

If the borrower who is the principal supporter of the family dies, the Government of British Columbia will forgive the remaining debt. There is no charge for this insurance — nor are there any application, legal or registration fees or charges.

Annual Home-owner Grants reduce your property taxes

Once you have purchased your new home you become eligible for the British Columbia Government Home-owner Grant of up to $170 annually — an important factor in helping to reduce the amount of your property taxes.

STUDENTS ON 'EDUCATIONAL' TRIP

Disaster at Every Turn

You think you've had bad trips in your life? Consider the perils of a group of Indian teenagers who left Victoria late this morning.

Midway through an educational bus trip around the province, 21 Slave Indians from Hey Lakes Indian Reserve in Northwestern Alberta have been courting disaster since they left Chateau on April 29.

"We can't believe it," said 22-year-old Gwen Locher, a group leader, shortly before the group left on the 11 a.m. ferry for the mainland.

BOUND TO HAPPEN

"We've settled for the fact that something bad is bound to happen every hundred miles or so."

Past events before the four adults and 21 teens, aged 13 to 17, found themselves stranded and temporarily rescued in Victoria Tuesday night, would appear to bear her out.

caught fire in the baggage compartment.

More tents were borrowed from friends in Edmonton, but shortly after the bus broke down. So they borrowed another vehicle.

STRANDED

At Lethbridge they had to send the borrowed bus back and were stranded until the army rescued them. Army trucks provided transportation until their bus caught up with them.

Other than more bus problems which ate up emergency funds, everything was fine until one of the students tumbled out of a burning tent near Hope. Clothes, shoes, seven sleeping bags and other belongings went up in smoke.

When they got to Vancouver, they decided to take a ferry trip so they crossed to Nanaimo.

But on the trip to Victoria the brakes on the bus decided not to co-operate and the group found themselves in the near Hope. Clothes, shoes, accommodation.

Waiting for the bus to be repaired, the group went to the Jaycee Fair. Miss Fischer said the boys went to the gambling booths "not realizing they were on a losing streak."

The boys lost.

At last word, however, the travellers luck appears to be improving. The Jaycees referred the teens to Cool Aid House where they later spent the night and McDonald's Hamburgers fed them free of charge.

After leaving Victoria the tour continues to Kamloops, Jasper, Banff and, fingers crossed, home on June 1.

The trip was the result of weeks of work, with finances coming from the students themselves, the Alberta government and community groups.

The idea was that the tour would be educational. It's been some education.

But the students are the first ones to tell you that they're enjoying themselves.

Sea Rescue Facilities Tried, Found Wanting by Sidney Man

A 61-year-old Sidney excavation worker recently tested marine rescue facilities all night long in that area — and found them wanting.

It happened May 11 when Dirk Van der Kemp took his two friends, Bruce and Judy Bourquin of Sidney out fishing in his 21-foot cabin cruiser.

Also along were the Bourquins' two daughters, aged four and two.

About 9 p.m. the cruiser's motor failed. The boat drifted 1½ miles off the Sidney wharf.

Van der Kemp set off two flares and Bourquin spent the entire night sending SOS signals with a flashlight.

Nothing happened.

Van der Kemp, who only began boating when he bought his cruiser 18 months ago, has lost his faith in the adage that fellow mariners come to the rescue when others are in distress.

He said a sailboat under power came right at them about 10 p.m.

"She came right at us for about 15 minutes. We pointed our signals at them but they turned away and went around Sidney Spit."

A tugboat did the same thing.

Nothing happened either when a car arrived on the Sidney wharf about 4 a.m. The SOS signals went unheeded.

At 9 a.m. they got the motor working and within 15 minutes the boat was tied up alongside.

Van der Kemp told his story because he feels the public should be aware that prompt response to distress signals can never be guaranteed, even near a built-up area like Sidney.

"I just want to say there should be at least one authorized person in a place where he can take a peek over the water now and again."

He admits that because of the Queen's visit, many Sidney residents may have been in Victoria instead of at home that evening.

Faculty Head Attacks Partridge 'Innuendo'

University of Victoria faculty association president Dr. Charles Doyle Tuesday attacked university president Bruce J. Partridge for repeated use of "innuendo" in public statements.

Doyle, an associate professor of English, referred specifically to statements made by Partridge after the Canadian Association of University Teachers censured the Uvic president over a dispute involving non-renewal of contracts of three Uvic professors.

"Not surprisingly, President Partridge is unhappy with the censure motion," Doyle said. "His response to it, as quoted in the newspapers demonstrates very well a characteristic feature of his approach to our problems. Many of us deplore his repeated use of innuendo.

"For example, he hints that CAUT 'has been the subject of some question in academic circles in recent years.' What particular circles? How widely?"

Doyle maintains that Partridge quoted, out of context, a statement made by CAUT president Gordon Kaplan, that the university does not have to show cause for not renewing a teacher's contract.

"Both CAUT and the University of Victoria faculty association hold that no faculty member has the automatic right of contract renewal. However, once an academic committee established for the purpose has voted in favor of an individual's contract renewal the situation is very different."

Doyle attacked Partridge's statement that he "concurred in the recommendations of the Dean" (of arts and science) in overturning de-

Rails Want Telegraph Rate Increase

MONTREAL (CP) — Some press rates will be increased by more than 100 per cent if the Canadian transport commission approves an increase being sought by CN-CP Telecommunications in the rate for telegraph messages within Canada.

The charge for transmitting press copy is one-sixth the charge for full-rate telegraph messages. Any increase in the charge for full-rate messages automatically affects the press rates.

The telecommunication companies announced Monday they had filed new tariffs with the Canadian transport commission for rate increases on telegraph messages within Canada.

The companies said the rate increases are being sought to provide additional revenues of $12 million to offset partially losses of $6.6 million in 1970. A spokesman estimated the new rates would increase revenues by about 10 per cent.

Rising costs and declining volume of messages were given as reasons for the requested increase, due to go into effect June 28. The last increase was in 1967.

Under the new structure, press rates will be affected by three major changes — division of the country into three zones, an increase in the basic rate for a 15-word full-rate message and an increase in the rate for the 16th and subsequent words in full-rate messages.

Doyle said "the most disturbing feature of President Partridge's response to the censure motion is his comment that, 'A small group of dissident faculty members has been trying for a year to create a situation in which CAUT would censure Uvic.' "Universities, as such, are never censured. In the few past instances of censure, it has been imposed on president and board of governors jointly. Since the University of Victoria has not been censured, strictly speaking, the comment is irrelevant."

"Apart from that, it is the most serious kind of innuendo, an insidious attack on free inquiry. The comment tends to suggest that all faculty members (and they are a very large number) who are unhappy with President Partridge's conduct in this situation are, therefore, 'dissident.'"

Office Workers, Hydro 'Agree'

Agreement has been reached between the negotiating committees of B.C. Hydro and the Office and Technical Employees Union for a new contract, it was reported today.

A B.C. Hydro spokesman said the tentative agreement requires ratification by both the union's members and the crown corporation's board of directors and details would not be released until this occurs.

Some 2,200 office workers are involved.

In the dispute between Hydro and Local 258 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, negotiations continued today before mediation officer Clark Gilmore.

The union said Tuesday it would serve strike notice unless a wage offer was made. It could not be learned if a wage offer was made, but a B.C. Hydro spokesman did say no strike notice has been served. The IBEW local represents 2,000 electrical workers.

Pay Freeze, Cuts Favored by Most

By THE CANADIAN INSTITUTE OF PUBLIC OPINION (World Copyright Reserved)

Two-in-three Canadian adults (65 per cent) say that if they worked for a company which was in economic difficulties, they would accept a temporary wage-freeze, rather than go on strike. Surprisingly, the ratio is exactly the same among men and women in labor union homes, as it is among those with no labor union affiliations.

While the idea of taking a 10 per cent wage cut under the same conditions is favored by a smaller segment, it is still the majority, (51 per cent). In this case, those connected with labor unions show a different attitude from those who are not. Less than half of those in labor union households (47 per cent) say they would agree to a wage cut, while 33 per cent say they would rather go on strike. In non-union homes, 57 per cent report they would take the wage-cut, and only 17 per cent that they would strike.

Whether they talk in terms of a temporary wage-freeze, or a 10 per cent wage cut, acceptance of the idea is lower in the Maritimes, than it is elsewhere.

When such situations occurred in Canada recently, Gallup interviewers set out to determine how the public as a whole would react, if it had to face such a crisis, by asking two questions:

"A company in this country recently asked its employees to take a 10 per cent cut in pay because of poor economic conditions. What do you think you would do if you were in that position — take a pay cut, or go on strike?"

The second question:

"Another company asked its employees to take a wage-freeze for three years. What would you be inclined to do if you were in that position — agree to a temporary wage-freeze, or go on strike?"

The table below reveals the reactions regionally, and as between adults in Union and non-Union homes. The balance, in each case is undecided.

Author Refuses Michener Award

OTTAWA (CP) — One of six Canadian authors selected to receive Governor-General literary awards refused to accept the honor at a presentation made by Governor-General Roland Michener Tuesday.

Fernand Ouellette, 40, a CBC public affairs producer, gave political reasons for not accepting the award. He was selected for his collection of essays, Les Actes Retrouvés.

Writer-editor-publisher David Godfrey, 32, received an award for his novel, The New Ancestors, hailed by critics as a major development in Canadian literature.

A third novel chosen for the awards was La Femme de l'été by Monique Bosco, 43, a professor of French literature at the University of Montreal. Other awards went to:

—Jacques Brault, 37, professor of philosophy at the University of Montreal, for his play Quans Nous Serons Heureux.

—B. P. Nichol, 26, for three books of poems—Beach Head, Still Water, The True Eventual Story of Billy the Kid—as well as an anthology edited by him, The Cosmic Chef: An Evening in Concrete.

—Michael Ondaatje, 27, Ceylonese-born English teacher at the University of Western Ontario, London, Ont., for his book of prose and poetry The Collected Works of Billy the Kid.

—Robert Weaver of the CBC and editor of Tamarack Review was head of the selection committee's English-language jury. Ottawa writer Claire Martin headed the French-language panel.

Navy Divers Search For Missing Boater

Five navy divers from Colwood were searching today for the body of a Duncan man whose wife and two children died of exposure Sunday when their 12-foot boat apparently swamped in rough seas off Salt Spring Island.

Also joining in the search around Vesuvius Bay for Gary Henry Salter, 26, of 3324 Gibbons Road, was an RCMP

12-foot skiff, powered by a 9½ horsepower outboard.

Police have little hope that the man will be found alive.

An unemployed truck driver and mechanic, he and his family had been to Booth Bay on Salt Spring Island Sunday to gather clams for extra money.

The bodies of his wife, Yuet Han Patsy Salter and two children, Wai Sze Fong and Wai Kwok Fong, were found washed up on Vesuvius beach at 7:30 a.m. Monday.

There are two other children, four-month-old Collin Salter and Kai Sze Fong, who are staying with Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Windsor, 3264 Gibbons.

Salter and his family moved to Duncan on Prince George last summer.

ing age be lowered to 18, that closing time be 3 a.m. in all bars, and that women be allowed into certain taverns which would have restaurant status. The last move would give women their first legal access to draft beer in Quebec.

Retailers should be liable in civil law for all injuries to others caused by inebriated persons and by adolescents to whom they have sold alcohol illegally, the report said.

MORE OUTLETS

Small corner grocers should be allowed to sell wines as well as beer and supermarkets should be given permits to sell beer. The proposed Quebec Liquor Corporation would also sell imported and Canadian beer.

By extending the retail distribution system for beer the province could cut costs enough to allow it to increase the tax on the beverage while cutting the price to the consumer, the commission said.

Beer would be taxed at the rate of 20 per cent, an increase from the present 16 per cent. This would provide 35 cents a gallon in tax revenue or 63 cents tax on a case of 24 12-ounce bottles. The same quantities now are taxed at 29 cents and 51 cents.

The proposed Quebec Liquor Corporation could establish retail stores reserved for beer sales, the report says.

Such stores would ensure a more direct link between domestic brewers and the consumer, and would correspond to the 460 Brewers' Retail stores in Ontario where the cost of retailing 24 12-ounce bottles is 58 cents, compared with $1.70 in Quebec.

Foreign beers would be taxed at only 20 per cent instead of the present 73 per cent. Wines would be taxed at 50 per cent compared with the present 67 per cent tax. Spirits would be taxed at 65 per cent compared with the present rate of 76 per cent.

Bamfield Considered For Biology Centre

A team from the National Research Council in Ottawa looking into development of a marine biology centre at Bamfield completed a two-day study on the west coast Tuesday.

But word on whether the NRC will support the project with an $800,000 grant is not expected before mid-June.

Five western universities — Victoria, UBC, Simon Fraser, Alberta and Calgary — want to operate the research centre, to be based in the former cable station at Bamfield, the tiny fishing community on Vancouver Island's southwest coast.

The universities have already purchased 190 acres at the site, including 1.8 miles of shoreline flanking Grappler Inlet. The grant sought from the NRC is basically for equipment.

The six-man delegation representing the NRC was joined by representatives from all five universities in a visit to the site Monday. On Tuesday they met to discuss the project at UBC.

A marine biology centre for research at Bamfield would be the first of its kind on the west coast. There are already three on the east coast and Canada operates another in the Barbados.

SOCIETY FORMED

The universities have established the Western Canadian Universities Marine Biological Society to develop the project and the society's president is Richard Lester, chairman of the board of governors at Simon Fraser.

He said today the society is extremely fortunate because the concrete cable station building, almost 70 years old, is in excellent condition and will require only minor alterations to be converted to laboratories, seminar rooms and other academic facilities. Only some residence building is planned.

Lester said it's hoped the universities will have the centre operational by next summer. Some marine biology projects have already been undertaken at the site.

Haney People 'Lost Faith In RCMP'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The people in the Fraser Valley community of Haney have lost faith in the local RCMP detachment following a Boxing Day car crash which killed five members of one family, George Mussallem, social credit member of the B.C. legislature, said Tuesday.

"They feel something has been hushed up because an off-duty RCMP constable was involved in the accident," Mr. Mussallem, a Haney automobile dealer, said in an interview.

He was commenting on an investigation into the crash ordered Monday by Attorney-General Leslie Peterson.

Mr. Peterson instructed chief B.C. coroner Glen McDonald to examine all the evidence produced at a mid-January inquest into the two-car smash at Haney.

Saanich Clubs Take 4-H Prizes

For the second day in a row, Saanich clubs took top honors Tuesday in the Jaycee Fair 4-H competition.

Saanich Beef Club member Glenda Madrie won the aggregate trophy and first place in the intermediate quiz competition while the Saanich Jersey Club won the stall competition.

Champion showman was Brenda Madrie, while quiz winners were Jody Aylard, Vivian Kennedy, Leslie MacAnly junior, Glenda and Brenda Madrie, Marilyn MacAlly intermediate, Richard Myrie and Diane Pendray senior.

The signing of the agreement followed private consultations with Kosygin, Trudeau, and later, with Communist Party Chief Leonid I. Brezhnev.

FIRST LEADER

Trudeau, who arrived in Moscow with his wife Margaret and an official party Monday, was the first western government leader to meet either Kosygin or Brezhnev since the 24th Party Congress.

Trudeau also became the first Western leader to confer with Brezhnev since the party leader urged the West to start negotiating a reduction of forces in Europe.

Brezhnev in a speech last Friday opened a new dialogue on the subject of possible troop cut negotiations between Washington and Moscow.

Trudeau and Kosygin also discussed prospects for military disengagement at their first talks Tuesday and diplomatic sources said they would go into the matter in greater detail late today.

Their talks lasted one hour and 45 minutes, the sources said.

BREAKTHROUGH

They quoted Brezhnev as telling Trudeau he viewed the protocol on diplomatic consultations as a major and historic breakthrough in the relations between the two countries.

Following the signing of the protocol, which Canadian sources said would not need parliamentary ratification, the Canadian and Soviet parties attended a reception in the Kremlin St. George's Hall at which Canada's Ambassador John Ford was host

Michael James Illes, 17, of 56 Sims, was given a suspended sentence and placed on a one-year probation for possession of stolen property over $50.

The offence involved a 10-speed bicycle stolen in April from Mount View Senior Secondary.

Emil Charity, 45, of 882 Courtney, was sentenced to a total of 30 days in jail on a two-count Saanich charge of impaired driving and refusing to take breath-analysis test, and on charges of impaired driving and refusing to take the breath test in Colwood.

Charity was given 20 days with a six-month driving ban on the first Saanich count and fined $200 or 30 days on the second.

He was also given 30 days on the first Colwood count and fined $300 or 30 days on the second. All sentences were made concurrent.

PORT COQUITLAM (CP) — City council here voted unanimously not to allow any schools in the city to be used to house transients during the summer.

We'll be glad to help with a $1000 Home Acquisition Grant or $5000 Second Mortgage Loan.

Go ahead and look around. We can make it easier for you to buy a new home of your choice or build one by providing an outright $1000 Home Acquisition Grant or a $5000 Second Mortgage Loan that may be used as part or all of your down payment.

To qualify: You must be the first occupant of the new home and must have lived in British Columbia for 12 months immediately preceding the date of purchase or completion of construction.

The Loan can equal but cannot exceed the difference between the cost of the property and the first mortgage. Previous British Columbia Government Annual Home-owner Grants will be deducted from the $1000 Grant, but not if you choose a Second Mortgage Loan.

Interest lower than on Federal N.H.A. first mortgages

If payments are made promptly there will be an annual refund of up to 10%, reducing the effective interest rate on a 25-year Second Mortgage Loan to 7½%. For example, the monthly payment on a $5000, 25-year Second Mortgage Loan is $41.00 but the 10% refund would in effect reduce this to $36.90.

All mortgages Fully Insured—without extra charge

If the borrower who is the principal supporter of the family dies, the Government of British Columbia will forgive the remaining debt. There is no charge for this insurance — nor are there any application, legal or registration fees or charges.

Annual Home-owner Grants reduce your property taxes

Once you have purchased your new home you become eligible for the British Columbia Government Home-owner Grant of up to $170 annually — an important factor in helping to reduce the amount of your property taxes.

STUDENTS ON 'EDUCATIONAL' TRIP

Disaster at Every Turn

You think you've had bad trips in your life? Consider the perils of a group of Indian teenagers who left Victoria late this morning.

Midway through an educational bus trip around the province, 21 Slave Indians from Hey Lakes Indian Reserve in Northwestern Alberta have been courting disaster since they left Chateau on April 29.

"We can't believe it," said 22-year-old Gwen Locher, a group leader, shortly before the group left on the 11 a.m. ferry for the mainland.

BOUND TO HAPPEN

"We've settled for the fact that something bad is bound to happen every hundred miles or so."

Past events before the four adults and 21 teens, aged 13 to 17, found themselves stranded and temporarily rescued in Victoria Tuesday night, would appear to bear her out.

caught fire in the baggage compartment.

More tents were borrowed from friends in Edmonton, but shortly after the bus broke down. So they borrowed another vehicle.

STRANDED

At Lethbridge they had to send the borrowed bus back and were stranded until the army rescued them. Army trucks provided transportation until their bus caught up with them.

Other than more bus problems which ate up emergency funds, everything was fine until one of the students tumbled out of a burning tent near Hope. Clothes, shoes, seven sleeping bags and other belongings went up in smoke. When they got to Vancouver, they decided to take a ferry trip so they crossed to Nanaimo.

But on the trip to Victoria the brakes on the bus decided not to co-operate and the group found themselves in the near hope. Clothes, shoes, accommodation.

Waiting for the bus to be repaired, the group went to the Jaycee Fair. Miss Locher said the boys went to the gambling booths "not realizing they were on a losing streak."

The boys lost.

At last word, however, the travellers luck appears to be improving. The Jaycees referred the teens to Cool Aid House where they later spent the night and McDonald's Hamburgers fed them free of charge.

After leaving Victoria "the tour continues to Kamloops, Jasper Banff and, fingers crossed, home on June 1."

The trip was the result of weeks of work, with finances coming from the students themselves, the Alberta government and community groups.

The idea was that the tour would be educational. It's been some education.

Sea Rescue Facilities Tried, Found Wanting by Sidney Man

A 61-year-old Sidney excavation worker recently tested marine rescue facilities all night long in that area — and found them wanting.

It happened May 11 when Dirk Van der Kemp took his two friends, Bruce and Judy Bourquin of Sidney out fishing in his 21-foot cabin cruiser.

Also along were the Bourquins' two daughters, aged four and two.

About 9 p.m. the cruiser's motor failed. The boat drifted 1½ miles off the Sidney wharf.

Van der Kemp set off two flares and Bourquin spent the entire night sending SOS signals with a flashlight.

Nothing happened.

Van der Kemp, who only began boating when he bought his cruiser 18 months ago, has lost his faith in the adage that fellow mariners come to the rescue when others are in distress.

He said a sailboat under power came right at them about 10 p.m.

"She came right at us for about 15 minutes. We pointed our signals at them but they turned away and went around Sidney Spit."

A tugboat did the same thing.

Nothing happened either when a car arrived on the Sidney wharf about 4 a.m. The SOS signals went unheeded.

At 9 a.m. they got the motor working and within 15 minutes the boat was tied up alongside.

Van der Kemp told his story because he feels the public should be aware that prompt response to distress signals can never be guaranteed, even near a built-up area like Sidney.

"I just want to say there should be at least one authorized person in a place where he can take a peek over the water now and again."

He admits that because of the Queen's visit, many Sidney residents may have been in Victoria instead of at home that evening.

The overnight expedition netted him a significant object lesson — and one cod.

Faculty Head Attacks Partridge 'Innuendo'

University of Victoria faculty association president Dr. Charles Doyle Tuesday attacked university president Bruce J. Partridge for repeated use of "innuendo" in public statements.

Doyle, an associate professor of English, referred specifically to statements made by Partridge after the Canadian Association of University Teachers censured the Uvic president over a dispute involving non-renewal of contracts of three Uvic professors.

"Not surprisingly, President Partridge is unhappy with the censure motion," Doyle said. "His response to it, as quoted in the newspapers demonstrates very well a characteristic feature of his approach to our problems. Many of us deplore his repeated use of innuendo.

"For example, he hints that

Rails Want Telegraph Rate Increase

MONTREAL (CP) — Some press rates will be increased by more than 100 per cent if the Canadian transport commission approves an increase being sought by CN-CP Telecommunications in the rate for telegraph messages within Canada.

tions made by the advisory committees.

"In the event, President Partridge received conflicting advice from several sources and, in choosing to act upon the advice of the Dean, he made a decision."

"The point of the CAUT charge is that president Partridge is ultimately responsible for reversing advisory committee recommendations and that, in addition, he persistently refused to explain his actions or to provide adequate means of appeal against them."

Doyle said "the most disturbing feature of President Partridge's response to the censure motion is his comment that, 'A small group of dissident faculty members has been trying for a year to create a situation in which CAUT would censure Uvic.'"

"Universities, as such, are never censured. In the few past instances of censure, it has been imposed on president and board of governors jointly. Since the University of Victoria has not been censured, strictly speaking, the comment is irrelevant."

"Apart from that, it is the most serious kind of innuendo, an insidious attack on free inquiry. The comment tends to suggest that all faculty members (and they are a very large number) who are unhappy with President Partridge's conduct in this situation are, therefore, 'dissident.'"

Doyle said this type of statement "shows contempt for the many concerned faculty members who are highly qualified men pursuing solid and unimpeachable careers, and most of who were serving the University of Victoria for years before President Partridge's arrival."

"Such comments by President Partridge are, in themselves, a leading reason for widespread misgivings about his administration," Doyle said.

"Reactions of this kind are responsible for the censure motion's statement that President Partridge 'has consistently obstructed and delayed a resolution not only of these cases but of the campus bitterness that has increasingly surrounded them.'"

Who's in Charge Here?

THE MORAL AND MILITARY madness of international escalation in nuclear weaponry is no better exemplified than in the matter of MIRV—the multiple independently targeted re-entry vehicle. This is the super-weapon created originally by the United States in which a missile carries three or more nuclear warheads—instead of the usual one—each of which can be sent to a separate target. It is the final—at this point—triumph of the nuclear missile, the least subject to successful defence, and the most destructive.

It is so effective, in fact, that at the first suspicion that the United States had invented it, the Russians immediately developed it too. This put the competitors back at the starting line again, and subsequent armament moves have been designed to overcome the ostensible equality which the two sides now enjoy.

The rationale is that a surprise attack by Russian MIRVs could wipe out American missile sites, use up United States protective missiles, and leave American cities open to destruction from a second wave of Soviet missiles. Of course, the opposite sequence could also occur, and this is what is reportedly sending Russia into further efforts to increase protective devices or expand attack facilities.

It is hard to realize that all this is taking place while the two nations indulge in periodic gatherings—called Strategic Arms Limitation Talks—to reduce the number and power of nuclear weapons and hence the threat of global destruction. The talks have been held, too, while ever bigger underground nuclear bomb tests continue, while still more U.S. nuclear submarines are equipped with still more nuclear missile launchers, and laboratories in both the giant countries no doubt are busy devising more lethal and defence-defying means of destruction.

This passes—while we approach the final quarter of the twentieth century—as national defence policy and programs for world security. It could be mistaken for a Peter Sellers comedy if it was not draining billions of dollars and roubles a year from more productive use, building unimaginable hazards into our precarious life on this planet, and keeping a stopwatch ticking over mankind day and night. We have given mutual mad fear a quarter of a century to produce a solution. How long must we wait for reason to take charge?

Inequalities for Aborigines

AUSTRALIA'S RECENT DECISION to abandon plans for nationwide anti-discrimination legislation for the country's 100,000 aborigines, leaving correction of injustice to the individual states, points up some of the problems confronting Canadians who wish to see provinces assume jurisdiction over Indians, with the federal authority phasing out its special Indian department.

In Australia, observers point out, some states follow policies which impose no legal discrimination against the aborigines. In others, legislation exists which can reduce them to virtually slave status, according to critics. Power over the lives, freedom and possessions of aborigines under such administrations, permits, an officer acting as director of native affairs to perform the functions of prosecutor, judge and jury without the necessity of reporting detention unless it exceeds six months. The aborigines, on the other hand, are seldom well enough informed to launch effective appeals.

Canadian legislation covering Indians is scarcely comparable. But, were provinces to assume the jurisdiction some seek for them, or have it thrust upon them, variations of treatment could occur prejudicial to Indians as a whole. In Canada we already have regional divergencies in laws—treatment of juvenile offenders on the basis of different juvenile age limits is a case in point. With the best of intentions, similar variations could exist in the treatment of Indians, if they came under exclusively provincial control.

Conflict Among Car-Makers

A SURPRISING CONTRADICTION has arisen in the attitude of spokesmen for car manufacturers as the debate continues on the eventuality of mass urban transit in the United States. Mr. Peter Griskivich, spokesman for the Automobile Manufacturers Association, supported financially only by the car manufacturers, makes the issue one of ideology.

"As long as we have a democracy," he says, "with freedom of choice and freedom of movement, the people of this country... will continue to cast their vote for the automobile."

But while Mr. Griskivich is declaring the right of the individual to add to urban congestion by insisting on driving his own car downtown, Ford and General Motors have given support to mass transit—favoring, naturally, the use of buses rather than street-railways. Their proposals would permit buses to travel public roads to pick up passengers and then move, at high speeds, over special roads, or specially designated lanes of existing highways, to and from discharge and embarkation points in the city and the suburbs.

Mass transit seems inevitable if there is to be transit at all in the increasingly clogged centres of cities. Mr. Griskivich seems only to be arguing a case to bring transportation to a standstill in such areas.

Best 'Bong' on Earth

IN THESE DAYS OF RAPID change, it seems almost anachronistic to chronicle the new development in the century-plus care of Big Ben. Even to the bell which sounds the hour for the Great Clock of Westminster, some change must come. It did in the form of a new caretaker, the firm of Thywaites & Reed, Ltd., with John Vernon as engineer in charge. For the preceding 112 years the work had been done by E. Dent & Co., who built and installed the clock.

So a free world notes with interest a new phase in care for the health of what some call the best "bong" on earth. An old and trusted friend, still in good shape, has changed physicians. Its preservation is important not alone for its resonant tone, the accuracy of its chiming, or any other mechanical excellence. It is revered because, when darkness fell on Europe in the long night of war, it gave forth the note of freedom, the impression of stability; the mature promise of a brighter day to come.

Just a big bell? Certainly. But it rings history—and the world listens.

FROM MONTREAL

Bourassa Silent on Tactics for Victoria

PREMIER Robert Bourassa and his advisers are reminding tight-lipped Quebecers that the province is not willing to make when Prime Minister Trudeau and the provincial premiers meet in Victoria next month.

Mr. Bourassa and his cabinet have been studying the outcome of the most recent session of federal-provincial bargaining which took place behind closed doors in Ottawa last February.

The young Quebec premier said three months ago that he was pleased with the progress at the second constitutional conference he had attended, but his optimism was cautiously worded.

There is still considerable uncertainty about whether Canada's leaders will decide to accept the constitutional amending formula that was discussed or any major redistribution of government powers—such as the social welfare jurisdiction that Mr. Bourassa demanded.

A consensus that there could be an agreement soon, as early as next month, was more optimistic in the press outside Quebec than among Canada's French-language journalists.

Whether Mr. Bourassa will accept the amending formula that he agreed to study after the February meeting still apparently depends on whether Mr. Trudeau and the other premiers can agree to concede Quebec major tax and spending power in the ever-growing social welfare area.

Patriation Essential

The amending formula would give five provinces, besides Quebec, a veto power over any constitutional changes. Mr. Bourassa is in agreement with Prime Minister Trudeau that an amending formula must be formally accepted so that Canada's constitution can be patriated from Britain. But he also knows that constitutional changes won't suddenly be as easy to obtain as Mexican divorces once some "magical" formula is accepted.

There is some tactical wisdom in wanting programs as a pre-condition to any other constitutional amendments. It has yet to be proven that major constitutional changes could be worked out with the six provinces veto formula. However, it is much more certain that once accepted, federal and provincial leaders would be under pressure to abide by the formula for some time to come.

Aside from his social welfare demands, Mr. Bourassa was also the only premier to express reservation about the linguistic and educational guarantees that were apparently accepted in principle by the English premiers.

Any Quebec premier is under constant pressure from the voters back home when he goes to a federal-provincial conference to show that he is protecting the future of the French language.

Linguistic Guarantee

With an obvious eye on the headlines in the French press, he told a group of Quebec reporters following the Ottawa meeting that the clause about linguistic guarantees in the country's schools provided no assurances for his province's cultural future. He said he was worried that entrenchment of the right to attend either a French or an English-language school might make it difficult someday to dissuade French parents from sending their youngsters to English institutions.

Mr. Bourassa is under new pressure since the recent announcement of the federal government that all of Quebec and New Brunswick will be designated bilingual districts, with the right to government services in French and English. Many Quebec Liberals, who have a difficult time as it is defending their federalist views in the face of separatist attacks, find the recent Ottawa announcement surprising in view of the upcoming Victoria conference.

Quebec's new official bilingual status does little to help French Canadians within Quebec's borders, although it may improve the quality of the French minorities in other provinces. The Ottawa decision is seen here as helping only the English minority, which is gathered mainly in Montreal's west end. It would be possible, if Ottawa goes through with its plans, to demand English services in areas of Quebec where there are no English Canadians.

Segments of the Victoria conference, unlike the February meeting, are to be televised. Mr. Bourassa is unlikely to forget that Quebecers watch the performance of their premiers at the federal-provincial bargaining sessions with a critical interest that is surpassed only by Stanley Cup hockey broadcasts. This will have some effect on the Quebec leader, who has not resorted to the belligerent theatrics of some of his predecessors at the two conferences he has attended so far.

The tone of the Quebec delegation, and the articulate young economist who heads it, may also be affected by the increasingly similar statements Ontario has been making about federal-provincial relations.

By PAUL WHITELAW

Although there has been no apparent collusion between Mr. Bourassa and William Davis, the Ontario Conservative who recently succeeded Premier John Robarts, there is an increasing community of views between the two men in opposing what they call Ottawa's "centralizing" policies.

Ontario and Quebec officials have been making surprisingly similar statements recently about jurisdictions over educational television and Ottawa's shared-cost programs which the provinces had had to accept.

Many of Quebec's economic and cultural aspirations have been opposed in the past because of their apparently nationalistic motivation. It would be harder for Mr. Trudeau to oppose a concerted opposition from the two largest provinces in Confederation.

FROM LONDON

A Canadian Cost for Britain's ECM Entry

PRAIRIE GRAIN GROWERS in particular, and Canadian bulk exporters in general, will pay their full share of the price for what has been hailed as "a major breakthrough" on Britain's application to join the Common Market.

That certain, something which transformed the whole atmosphere of the talks on the British application last week in Brussels has now become clear.

It was British agreement that there will be no transition period whatever for Commonwealth agricultural products. Rather, the selling edge or Common Market preference will apply fully from the date Britain expects to enter, Jan. 1, 1973.

Canada has been pressing for as much transition on all fronts in the negotiations as possible. Details of the Brussels agreement are being studied at the Canadian High Commission in preparation for a briefing from the British chief negotiator, Geoffrey Rippon.

The Canadian attitude is one of quiet caution. One source said the decision was not surprising but "we won't like it."

In Brussels Mr. Rippon agreed to accept from the start the full common agricultural policy of the Market. This was the point the French had been waiting for, the proof that Britain was really European and willing to accept the rules as they stand.

In return, the French and subsequently the Six agreed to the much-publicized but highly-doubted assurance for the future exports of Commonwealth sugar. They also agreed to dismantle the last industrial tariffs between Britain and the Six, six months earlier than proposed.

Canadian wheat is not in the same category as sugar by any means. The economies of several smaller countries depend on sugar exports. Unlike sugar producers, Canadian wheat growers don't face the stark possibility of the Common Market shifting their source of supply from abroad to home producers.

As long as Europe needs hard wheat and the Six or the expanded Ten don't grow much, they will look abroad for suppliers. Canada can still compete with the Russians or the Australians on equal terms over the Common Market preference to reach the British market.

Wheat Export Hit

It cannot be other than bad news that, if Britain joins, as of Jan. 1, 1973, every bushel of Canadian wheat will cost more than $1 per bushel over its present selling price in the British market. What makes it bad news is this: The higher price of hard wheat, whether Commonwealth or just plain foreign, will be further incentive for the British to do without it.

Already new milling methods have allowed Britain to use a greater percentage of soft wheats, which the Common Market does grow. This new method, as well as high prices and quality have influenced the decline in Canadian exports to the British market.

And without the Commonwealth pre-

The Duke of Edinburgh

As an old journalist who has reported royal tours, marriages, funerals and even a coronation, I have been amused to find that the CBC, our newspapers and our public orators have united in depriving the Queen's husband of his proper and official title. He is a prince by birth but he was created Duke of Edinburgh; consequently he should be referred to on all public occasions as His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh. —A. C. Cummings, 1013 Collinson.

Salaries and Policies

Every day the economic gap between the politically strong and the politically weak widens as inflation and cynicism pushes our country ever closer to anarchy and ruin. On the one side the unemployed, the unorganized and weakly organized, the small business people, the retired, and those on fixed incomes sinking further into poverty and despair. On the other side the powerful labor unions, the so-called professional associations and assorted mandarins of all types—the latter all-powerful enough to demand and get a greater and greater share of the gross national product at the expense of the rest of our people.

The economic program outlined to Prime Minister Trudeau by Dr. John Young was correct and Mr. Trudeau followed it to near success but at the last moment refused to curb the demands for huge increases in wages with cynical disregard for the facts and for the welfare of the people of this land. (No doubt this was done at the behest of Mr. Mackasey and his labor establishment friends.)

With this capitulation all hope of stopping inflation vanished and only one thing is now certain—there is much worse to come. Surely the last straw is the increase of MP salaries by nearly 50 per cent. This, after a year of telling the unemployed and others severely squeezed by Ottawa's economic policies that their suffering was necessary in the national interest! It has all been for naught as now even the MPs have forsaken their personal responsibility as members of your government, and have joined the big grab.

In our opinion the present situation as outlined above is an exact duplication of that in Germany just prior to the advent of Herr Hitler—a thought to ponder.—Yours very truly, Muriel M. Armstrong and John J. Armstrong, Mark Lane.

DENNIS THE MENACE

Looking Back

From the Times of May 19, 1911:

The management of the New Empress Theatre have secured some very interesting films for today and tomorrow. "The Red Avenger," a western drama by the Bison company, heads the list. The other films to be shown are "The Citizen," a comedy, and "The Actress," a comedy. The latter is a drama by the Lubin company.

The crowds at this theatre have been growing steadily during the past week and the management are thinking of enlarging the premises in order to accommodate them.

'Great Success'

Yet only a few hours later, after French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman returned from a cabinet meeting in Paris and after Mr. Rippon heard from London, he talked about "a great success" and advised betting on Britain's entry on schedule.

What happened in the meantime was the addition of a sentence stating the Six agree that sugar trade between the enlarged Market and the Commonwealth should be allowed to continue and "in this respect the enlarged community will have at heart the safeguarding of the interests of all the countries whose economy depends to a considerable extent on the exports of primary products and particularly sugar."

Asked if that constituted a bankable assurance, Mr. Rippon stressed it was the spirit that counted now. That indeed "The Citizen," a comedy, and "The Actress," a comedy, the latter is a drama by the Lubin company.

The crowds at this theatre have been growing steadily during the past week and the management are thinking of enlarging the premises in order to accommodate them.

Time to Tinker With World's Money System?

By FRANK C. PORTER

Whatever the embarrassment the United States suffered when its currency came under concerted attack in Europe last fortnight, it occurred under a system that was largely American-made.

Whatever the faults of that system, there is general recognition that it has served the world surprisingly well—at least until now.

The massive speculation against the dollar—much of it reportedly by American firms overseas—and the unusual decision of most European nations temporarily to suspend trading in the dollar has already receded from the front pages.

The West German mark, allowed to float freely after widespread rumors it would be devalued upward, has actually risen less than 3 per cent in relation to the dollar. This hardly appears to be convincing evidence that the dollar is badly undervalued. There is some suspicion now that the press—particularly the European press—overplayed the "crisis."

Other Attacks In the Future

Even though the speculative attack may fade rapidly into tenuous memory, there are bound to be others in the future.

They will raise the same disturbing questions all over again. Has American inflation really eroded the value of the dollar vis-a-vis other currencies?

Will the other major industrialized nations continue to put up with huge American deficits in international payments? Is the U.S. continuing to lose its competitiveness in world trade? Above all, should the dollar still be expected to carry the major burden of the world monetary order?

The awesome dimensions of this responsibility could hardly have been foreseen when this monetary system was forged in the mid-1940s.

Yet in what did prove to be a remarkable foresight, the major allied powers began informal discussions long before World War II ended. They were implemented in the historic Bretton Woods, N.H., conference of 1944, paying the way for establishment of the present International Monetary Fund, made up of more than 125 member countries.

Basic to the deliberations were two major plans which had been under discussion for some time—one by Britain's John Maynard Keynes, generally regarded as the most influential economist of the 20th century; the other by Harry Dexter White, the assistant secretary of the U.S. Treasury.

It was the White plan that almost completely prevailed, the Americans and British in effect dropping major provisions of the Keynes program in preliminary discussions during 1943.

The United States was emerging as the only relatively unscathed superpower from the war, and it is not surprising that it almost completely dominated the Bretton Woods discussions. The Soviets were there but dropped out. Actually the discussions wound up as bargaining largely between the U.S. Treasury department and the Congress.

In "Gold and World Power," written in 1966, Sidney E. Rofe had this to say about the deliberations:

"The ironic fact is that successive versions of the White (American) plan became more conservative, by which it is meant that they bore down harder on deficit countries and tied the system closer to the old gold standard, because White and other government officials compromised their plan with conservatives in Congress...

"It must be remembered that in this period congressional conservatism was associated with such terms as 'globaloney' and 'giveaway' plans. Basically the conservatives saw the Europeans as inept, unskilled beggars and the United States as the only strong power in the world. Their vision could not extend to the time when this imbalance would be corrected."

A further irony was that this supposedly conservative Bretton Woods agreement was the creation of the same Harry Dexter White accused of being a Soviet operative—first by Whittaker Chambers, then by Elizabeth Bentley, and finally by Attorney-General Herbert Brownell in 1953, five years after White had died of a heart attack.

Major Powers Feared Chaos

The major motivation for Bretton Woods stemmed from the major powers' fears of the economic and political chaos that had existed between wars. Horrendous swings between inflation and deflation, the worst world depression in history, economic nationalism and trade wars, the punitive aspects of the Versailles Treaty, competitive devaluations, a nasty experience with flexible exchange rates, the rise of Hitler and so on.

What value for a dollar?

Both the White and Keynes plans were exceedingly complex. But these were the main features of the later White program leading to establishment of the IMF:

● Currency exchange rates among countries were fixed with parity rates tied both to the dollar and gold, and a fluctuation of only one per cent allowed on either side. Changes in parity—that is, devaluations or revaluations upward of a particular currency—were called for only in cases of "fundamental disequilibrium," a term which monetary authorities came to find vague and inexplicit. (Actually there have been at least 60 devaluations of one currency or another since the IMF was founded.)

Scrap Controls To Get Balance

● The agreement gradually did away with restrictions such as foreign-exchange controls in attempting to balance individual nations' foreign payments accounts.

● The IMF established a "liquidity" pool made up of quotas of gold and foreign currency reserves for each member. Those nations with deficits an excess of international payments over receipts could "draw" or borrow from this pool in order to cover this deficit and to maintain the value of their currency in foreign exchange markets, thus giving them time to work out their balance of payments difficulties.

But because both these drawings and a country's gold and foreign exchange are limited, a deficit country under IMF rules has only one recourse short of devaluation to bring its payments into balance and maintain the international integrity of its own currency. That is to devalue its economy by raising interest rates, lowering prices, discouraging imports and encouraging exports.

But this classical medicine can be painful—even prohibitive—for domestic political reasons, because it usually results in wide-spread unemployment and loss of income.

The Keynes plan, which the Americans rejected, might have at least partially solved this dilemma. It would have put as much burden on the creditor nations to reduce their payments surpluses as the debtor nations to cut their deficits. It would have reduced the dependence on scarce gold by establishing a "supranational bank" empowered to create reserves in addition to gold (the IMF has subsequently moved in this direction by issuing supplemental drawing rights, or SDRs, sometimes known as "paper gold").

And while the Keynes plan envisioned fixed exchange rates for the short-run, it looked to variable par values over the long term, thus giving nations added flexibility in making adjustments. (Here, too, the IMF has moved in Keynes' direction by at least discussing "the drawing peg," a device by which exchange rates would be allowed to fluctuate over a greater range than they do now.)

It was natural for the Americans to favor the White plan, with its built-in bias toward the surplus countries, because the United States was expected to remain a surplus nation for the indefinite future. The problem of the free world economy at war's end, in fact, was a dollar gap—a shortage of American money flowing overseas—to help relieve a global credit shortage.

The situation changed dramatically in the 1950s as foreign aid, the expense of American troops stationed overseas, American companies' investment abroad, tourist expenditures and the like greatly exceeded the reverse flow of dollars back into the United States.

Had Deficit Every Year

The U.S. consequently has suffered a balance of payments deficit every year since 1950 with the exception of 1957 during the Suez crisis.

"It is evident in retrospect that the United States has not been well served by the Bretton Woods plan, even though it was the product of American ingenuity," Rofe wrote in "Gold and World Power."

"Indeed, the United States would have been better served by the Keynes plan, as it turns out, and even better served by a plan that made life easier for deficit countries than either the White plan or the Keynes plan did."

While this great outpouring of dollars might appear to be a symbol of the American economy's great strength, they go into the international ledgers as debits against the United States and cause many foreigners to suspect the strength of the American currency.

Theoretically there would come a point at which foreign governments and central banks would be unwilling to hold such massive amounts of dollars and would create a run by rushing to turn them in for gold and other currencies.

Their Stability Depends on It

But foreign governments would be reluctant to do this, since the dollar has become a truly international currency upon which their own stability depends in large part.

There is even concern overseas that if the United States were able to get its international payments into balance and even run a surplus, the consequent reduction in the dollar outflow would hurt their own economies. In other words, they depend on the American deficit for their own prosperity.

Indeed, there are many who believe this long dollar outflow has been a primary lubricant for the amazing economic resurgence in the rest of the free world and particularly the defeated nations in World War II—Germany, Japan and Italy—and the comparative success of Bretton Woods.

But doubts are multiplying that this essentially uneven relationship should be continued indefinitely. As the other industrialized nations continue to grow in wealth and prestige, should they continue to rely on a single superpower as the world's leading banker?

Thus, while Bretton Woods may have served the western world reasonably well, there is likely to be increasing pressure for a new point of departure in the international monetary system.

'Smell of Whitewash' Hangs Over B.C. Town

THE SUN

This editorial appeared Saturday. On Monday Attorney-General Peterson ordered the provincial chief coroner to conduct an investigation into the case.

The cloud hanging over the official investigation into the highway smashup which killed five members of a Haney family suddenly has grown larger and darker.

The good name of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and of the coroner's court system, as well as of Canadian justice, is further scandalized every day that Attorney-General Leslie Peterson delays demanding a full and true accounting of those deadly happenings of Boxing Day.

Slapstick Inquest

Mr. Peterson, we are told, finally has received a transcript of the inquest proceedings from the Haney RCMP after trying twice, and failing twice, to get one from the coroner.

He also should be in possession, by now, of most disturbing information dug up in Haney during several days of investigation by a reporter team from a new and obscure tabloid newspaper called New Leaf.

While the tabloid's facts and insinuations may be challenged—indeed it is Mr. Peterson's duty to do so—the slapstick inquest alone should make him ask, along with a public that likes to see justice done, just what has been going on.

From one source or another, in any event, the attorney-general knows that on the evening of December 26, RCMP Constable Orville Nickel, 21, of the Haney detachment, was off duty and joy-riding ("in his Ford fast-back with his girl friend, Judy Newman, age 16," details the New Leaf) when a police car passed on the Loughheed Highway, sirens wailing. Constable Nickel took off after it.

Somewhat, a car carrying Ronald Johnson, his wife and three of their five children got in his way, broadside. The crash was heard for several blocks. The Johnsons' Pontiac Beaumont was knocked 150 feet and was reduced to a pile of junk.

Switched Hats

The attending physician, Dr. S. R. Arbor, pronounced all occupants of the Johnson car dead at the scene. Constable Nickel and his passenger received only minor injuries.

The inquest was unusual for a number of reasons. The coroner was Dr. S. R. Arbor, who had to switch hats to give evidence about his role as attending physician; this was not only contrary to coroner's court procedure but doubly unfortunate in that the protective conduct of Constable Nickel's station-mates a purple felt bag in Nickel's car. To our knowledge, this fact was not brought up at all at the coroner's inquest.

"A blood sample from Constable Nickel was taken at his own request... (it) was not taken to the city analyst's office in Vancouver until... 62 hours after it had been taken. In the meantime, it had been kept in the home refrigerator of one of Constable Nickel's fellow officers..."

"Some witnesses who had given their names to the police as having seen the accident were not called to the inquest..."

"Witnesses... testified that Nickel had been going at least 50 miles per hour shortly before the crash..."

"...the majority of the jurors seem to have been people who... would be in fairly regular or close contact with the police..."

Key People Left

"Three key people involved in the case have now departed from the scene... Constable Nickel was transferred to Trail... Dr. Arbor left for a holiday shortly after the inquest (and) will not be back until the end of June... Staff Sergeant Harding, the officer in command of the Haney RCMP detachment at the time of the accident and inquest, retired from the force shortly after the inquest..."

"One person who was present at the scene of the accident told us, 'it was a straight whitewash from the word go'..."

Either the tabloid is guilty of great mischief, in which case there is ample recourse in law for those who have been harmed, or it has done a major public service in bringing light on a most-suspect affair.

Not Boondocks

As matters stand, rightly or wrongly there is indeed the smell of travesty, if not whitewash, hanging over the handling of this tragedy. Haney is a small town in British Columbia, not in the redneck boondocks of Florida or Texas. The people of this province, many of whom have felt the zeal of RCMP highway patrols enforcing the most innocuous of traffic regulations, cannot be encouraged to believe there is one law for the public, another for the police.

New Leaf demands a new inquest, arguing, rightly that the appeal against the spending charge dismissal "doesn't go nearly far enough" toward cleaning up this mess.

When China Hits the Track

By ART STOTT

One of the intriguing stories from Tibet during a revival of western interest in the occult a few years ago concerned the incredible physical feats attributed to some of that land's holy men. It was said that some of them, geared into a sort of mental-spiritual exaltation defying normal physical laws, could travel vast distances at running speeds unknown to the western world. As the story went, they would appear to bounce in giant strides over the land, covering leagues far beyond human physical endurance.

It seemed to me, as the account gained credence among some of the more credulous, that none of these holy men had demonstrated their prowess in a way to convince students of the sports record books. Why, I wondered, didn't a couple of them prove their fantastic abilities by sweeping a few major marathons, perhaps in the Olympic Games?

There was an answer to my query. Living the spiritual lives of their faith, they would merely lose grace by showing off their capacities and would relinquish their particular power by exploiting it. They weren't interested in mundane foot racing. The explanation appeared to be a splendid cover. You couldn't disprove the claims if they weren't subject to acceptable tests.

The Tibetan story comes to mind with reports of Peking's concentration on athletics at this time—a state-supported campaign to produce the best in the world. Since China took over Tibet a few years ago, why not now demonstrate to a skeptical western society the superiority of the holy men in covering ground faster than anyone else can run?

My acquaintance with Chinese athletes is entirely vicarious and extremely limited. I have read about C.K. Yang, who set world decathlon records, following training in the United States. But he came from Taiwan, owed allegiance there. And now we have the world-beating lady hurdler and sprinter, Chi Cheng, also with Taiwan connections, who recently married her American coach.

Offhand, I don't remember any other world class athletes of Chinese origin—though they could be very good at ping-pong. By the same token, until shortly before they swept the Olympic swim titles at Los Angeles in 1932, I hadn't recalled any outstanding Japanese competitors in that sport either.

But I expect to hear about the Chinese in the future. When the rulers of three-quarters of a billion people, whose concentration, physical ability, vitality and drive are not questioned, decide to make sport the thing, the chances are that they're going to succeed—with or without the bounding marathoners of the Tibet story.

In a special feature written for The Christian Science Monitor, Robert Tay, assistant sports editor of Hong Kong's leading English-language newspaper, describes the effort centred on the unique training camp inside China.

On the island of Tai Sha Tau, in the Pearl River Delta a few minutes' sampam ride from Canton, China is training top athletes to be world-beaters, he says.

They have expert coaching, fully modern equipment, a diet that leaves nothing to be desired, a strict schedule and tough discipline—which they accept because disobedience would push them from the ranks of the athletic elite—which is part of all China's elite today. They literally live, eat and sleep for their sport three months a year.

Given all the advantages, the sheer weight of Chinese manpower—and woman power—is bound to hit the sports world with an impact nobody can ignore.

The Russian pattern has shown what a Communist country can do in athletics. Japan's swimmers—and more recently its girls' volleyball teams and other groups—have indicated the capacity of Asians.

Production by China seems to be only a matter of time in the realm of international champions. The prestige and larger political importance of demonstrating prowess in sport is generally recognized. The young people of Tai Sha Tau have nowhere to go but up—and they'll go.

But when the gold medals start flowing in to the glory of Mao and the Peoples Republic, some of us who are obsolete in today's sport will wonder what has been lost that made our games a sort of shining enjoyment. We competed, did all we could within acceptable conventions to win. But the medal, important as it was, may not have been the chief reward. As Pierre de Coubertin once pointed out, the joy lay in competing well. That was the razor's edge of living. With it went fellowship among peers and shared associations among people of common interest.

Perhaps that sentiment can prevail when the state moulds the performer. Since this is the way to victory, there's no particular reason why we who are out-of-date in sports philosophy should consider the technique dehumanizing. We can't help thinking, though, that at the dog tracks the electric rabbit always wins.

The Last Taboo Of All...

NEW STATESMAN

"Birth, copulation and death," said Sweeney Agonistes. "These are the facts when you come to hard tasks."

And in our brave, new, permissive society all the facts are publishable—at least about birth, copulation and violent death.

But there is still one part of human experience concealed by a veil of prudery. The facts about natural death are still treated as indecent and publication is prevented by a conspiracy which unites the medical profession with the world of art and literature.

The Romans valued timely suicide as an old-fashioned virtue. They were not afraid to discuss how best to die; nor were our Christian forefathers even a century ago.

But now our permissive society has become coy and prudish about it, perhaps because it is so rare that it is frightening.

And as a result of our making it a shocking secret it is almost certain that the only person who won't be consulted about what happens to him is the dying man.

A prudish refusal to discuss death frankly causes far more unnecessary misery than prudery about sex ever did.

M.E.P.C.

The bill in interest rates at present has encouraged M.E.P.C. Canadian Properties Ltd. directors to authorize an issue of sinking fund debentures and rights to finance new growth.

Shareholders next month will be able to subscribe for one new share of stock for each four common shares held, at a price of $5.20 each, subject to regulatory approval.

The company in the six months ended March 31 had net rental income of $3.5 million ($2.67 million) and net operating income of $1.57 million ($1.26 million), or after-tax net of $702,000 (16.4 cents a share) vs. $540,000 (13.9 cents) a year ago.

Murphy

Murphy Oil Co. Ltd. reports better than 400 per cent improvement in earnings a share during the first quarter. Revenue of $124 million ($9.98 million) produced net income of $1.59 million (56 cents a share) compared with $386,000 (12 cents).

Cash flow rose from $1.19 million (41 cents a share) to $2.45 million (87 cents), which along with earnings represents a new high.

Non-recurring revenue worth $736,000 was a major factor in the improved performance.

Dominion

Dominion Stores Ltd. 1970 sales rose 17.9 per cent, but net earnings were off substantially in a year of intense eastern Canada grocery competition.

The company reports sales of $768.45 million — highest ever — compared with $651.65 million to March 20, leaving net earnings of $3.3 million (41 cents a share) vs. $9.3 million ($1.15).

Fourth quarter sales at $226.23 million (up 32.6 per cent) were the first reflecting a new merchandising policy compared with a year ago ($170.57 million). Profit in the quarter was $1.39 million (17 cents) vs. $2.74 million (34 cents).

Robin Hood

Robin Hood Multifoods Ltd., of Montreal, had net profit of $2.38 million last year — up 9 per cent from $2.17 million in 1969-70.

In the year ended with February, the company, a wholly-owned subsidiary of International Multifoods, of Minneapolis, had sales of $104.88 million, second highest in the company's history. This was 6 per cent higher than the $98.78 million of the previous year.

Although founded in 1909 by its parent firm, the Montreal company is making its first report to the public, man-

'New' RCMP
Uniform

The RCMP has a new working uniform — only it's not that new.

The mounted police have gone back to breeches and boots in their "service order" across Canada for what a spokesman called "a trial period at least."

A peak cap, brown jacket, blue breeches with yellow stripe, and brown boots with spurs will be worn by officers to replace the broad-brimmed hat, blue trousers and black boots. A brown shirt with blue tie will be worn in summer.

If this outfit sounds familiar, it's because it is. Every RCMP man already had breeches and boots as part of his kit even though they have not been used lately.

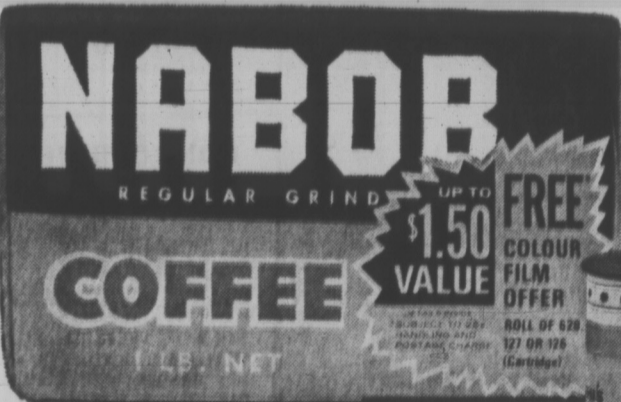

The change will not involve a large expenditure.

Officers will find the peak cap a bit more manageable in patrol cars than the broad-brim, which created problems.

Officers will not wear boots and spurs when operating in planes or boats.

NATURAL WAVE action on rugged sand and gravel beach has cleansed old evidence of tailings disposal at Jordan River. New plan for Sunro mine would dump tailings off distant point and leave beach unspoiled. "It's a beautiful beach," said mine manager Charles Campbell Jr., surveying the site. (Photos by Kent.)

DAY SHIFT of maintenance miners emerges from main portal of Sunro copper mine, perched on east bank of Jordan River canyon, where production is to resume this year. Track of narrow gauge diesel railway is barely discernable at left, where copper concentrates will be brought out from mill situated more than a mile underground.

Sunro—Rebirth Pains Coming on Strong

Mine Willing to Co-Operate on Disposal of Mine Tailings

By AB KENT
Business Editor

Charles M. Campbell Jr. feels a mine coming on.

Specifically, it's the old Cowichan Copper mine at Jordan River, now held by Dison Development Ltd. on lease from Cominco and financed by French-based international interests.

Charlie Campbell, a mining engineer, is general manager of Dison, and the driving force behind the rebirth of the Sunro following a 2½-year hiatus.

Its intermittent life has been noted for production of good grade copper concentrates, it has abundant ore reserves indicated, lies within an area whose industrial fortune rises and falls with the lumber market.

But it needs a pollution control permit to resume production because operations include annual dumping up to 1 million gallons of tailings slurry into the sea—a half-mile from Jordan River community.

Controversy rumbles as residents, parkmen, conservationists, recreationists, administrators, Boy Scouts and sundry others on southern Vancouver Island sound their objections to tailings disposal on a natural beach.

Their point is well taken. No one wants a muddy, greenish-black muck pouring over an unspoiled West Coast beach, with possible risk of damage to marine life.

Neither does Campbell, who considers himself a conservationist. He is also a formidable and persistent advocate of mining, who may be remembered for his battle with authorities in the opening of Western Mines' property at Butte Lake.

That was a fight involving tailings disposal in the lake forming part of the Campbell River watershed and source of the area's domestic water supply. Western Mines won.

Application for the Dison tailings permit passed its first hurdle—the regional district administration—after an 11-week wait. The district, although having reservations about the disposal of mine waste in the proposed fashion, found no bylaws were contravened and gave consent.

The provincial pollution branch is now considering the bid and if a permit is granted a series of conditions must be met, conditions about which experience is still being sought, since this type of permit is relatively new.

There is precedent—recently at Utah Construction and Mining Co.'s Port Hardy project, and historically at Britannia Beach in Howe Sound—but scientific studies are lacking.

Campbell thinks the Sunro can empty its mill effluent into Juan de Fuca Strait where there is constant washing and scrubbing action from waves and tide flow at a point just below the low tide mark.

When Cowichan Copper operated the mine at intervals between 1962 and 1968, tailings were dumped over a cliff at the base where most eventually were washed away by the sea.

According to local residents, this cleansing took some time, during which the mine was inoperative.

But Dison's consultant recommends not only moving the point of outfall 600 feet eastward, where current is stronger, but extending the pipe down the cliff, burying it the width of the beach and securing the seaward end so that tailings slurry would always empty into water.

Campbell points out a difficulty of accomplishing this would be the risk of exposing the outfall pipe to damage in heavy seas which bring in, gravel, some rather large rocks, and many driftwood logs.

But the company is prepared to do the bidding of the pollution control branch.

"The important thing is that we enter into this thing in a spirit of co-operation," Campbell said. "We are as conscious of the environment and of the importance of preserving it as anybody."

The alternatives to putting slurry into the sea are to create tailings ponds or to leave the copper ore undisturbed.

With something around $500,000 invested in mine rehabilitation so far, the prospect of 1.75 million tons of 1.2 per cent proven and probable ore ready to be mined and the possibility of another 2 million tons within easy reach of existing underground workings, it is unlikely the developer will abandon the project.

Tailings ponds, where slurry is allowed to settle, require considerable area and careful construction to avoid contamination by leaching. Campbell is against ponds because the terrain would necessitate putting them on or adjacent to B.C. Hydro right of way or the Jordan River community.

Such "socially desirable land," thinks Campbell, is unsuitable for tailings disposal.

The pollution permit application states a maximum of 1 year would be disposed of. Campbell said this is misleading without the further knowledge that the solids contained in that mixture of water and fine particles would be no more than 500,000 tons, pro-

MINE MANAGER Charles Campbell Jr. examines a lump of old mine tailings above the high tide mark at Jordan River beach. The solidified material is like dried mud, similar to river silt with a greenish tinge. Suggested plan is to disperse future waste through wave action over a wide sloping beach extending two miles seaward.

Bank of B.C. Revenue Increases

VANCOUVER — The Bank of British Columbia Tuesday reported an increased balance of revenue in the first six months of its 1971 fiscal year of $56,704 over the same period last year.

An interim statement showed the balance of revenue at $492,784 compared with $346,080 in the first half of 1970. The bank's fiscal year begins Nov. 1.

Chairman and President A. F. Hall said in the report that the bank "is hopeful that a further improvement in earnings will be evident over the balance of the year."

The bank's statements showed that deposits totalled $132,578,791 at April 30, compared with $76,856,405 on the same date last year.

Loans at April 30 totalled $92.6 million compared with $48.3 million in the previous year.

Hall said he believes B.C.'s economic outlook is good.

Denominations: $1,000, $5,000, $25,000, $100,000 and $1,000,000
- and
- 5 year 5 1/2% bonds due June 1, 1976
Issue price: 99.00%
Yielding about 5.98% to maturity
Interest payable December 1 and June 1
Denominations: $1,000, $5,000, $25,000, $100,000 and $1,000,000
- and
- 8 year 6 1/2% bonds due June 1, 1979
Issue price: 99.00%
Yielding about 6.66% to maturity
Interest payable December 1 and June 1
Denominations: $1,000, $5,000, $25,000, $100,000 and $1,000,000.

Bank of Canada has agreed to acquire a minimum of $175,000,000 of the new bonds, open as to maturity.

Proceeds of the offering will be used to redeem $425,000,000 of Government of Canada bonds maturing June 1, 1971 and for general purposes of the Government of Canada.

The new 5% bonds due April 1, 1974 are an addition to $100,000,000 of 5% bonds due April 1, 1974 and dated April 1, 1971.

The new bonds will be dated June 1, 1971 and will bear interest from that date. Principal and interest are payable in lawful money of Canada. Principal is payable at any Agency of Bank of Canada. Interest is payable at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank without charge. Definitive bonds will be available on June 1, 1971 and thereafter in two forms: bearer form with coupons attached and fully registered form with interest payable by cheque. Bonds of both forms will be in the same denominations and fully interchangeable as to denomination and/or form without charge (subject to Government transfer requirements where applicable).

The new bonds are authorized pursuant to an Act of the Parliament of Canada and both principal and interest are a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Applications for the new bonds may be made, subject to allotment, through any investment dealer eligible to act as a primary distributor or, through any bank in Canada.

GRATEFUL FANS at Montreal airport muss hair of goalie Ken Dryden as they show appreciation of Dryden's efforts that earned him Conn Smyth Trophy as most-valuable player in Stanley Cup hockey playoffs. Fans greeted Canadiens as they returned from defeating Black Hawks 3-2 Tuesday night in Chicago.

BILL WALKER

It was just one year ago, last week, when a severe blow was aimed at Canadian unity. Montreal, and Quebec, got the 1976 Summer Olympics in the bidding at Amsterdam. Garibaldi, and British Columbia, didn't get the 1976 Winter Olympics. It was a bitter-sweet day for Canada.

There was a hushed silence, then a wild hugging scene in the Montreal section when the decision was announced. In the B.C. group there was complete shock.

Montreal had won out over the big powers. Los Angeles and Moscow had been put down together. For Los Angeles, it was a major blow. Host for the 1932 games, smogville was considered a shoo-in for '76. For Moscow it was a rank snub. No Communist nation had ever hosted the Olympics. None would in 1976 either.

For B.C. it was a shattered dream, although the voting hadn't even begun for the Winter Games. Montreal's coup had killed Garibaldi's chances. No nation would get both games. That's why Denver wound up as the winner. The Winter Olympics would be in the U.S. The spirit of '76 would live on after all.

Later, when the hugging was over, Montreal's portly little mayor hustled down the aisle to deliver his acceptance address. Jean Drapeau cited the spirit of the Olympics, and promised to host the event in the theme of... "humbleness, simplicity, and dignity..."

If there will be no humbleness once the games commence, there was little dignity that night either. At a Montreal victory party, to which the B.C. contingent had been invited, the bitterness was plain to see. Vancouver Mayor Tom Campbell didn't even bother to rise as Drapeau entered the banquet room. If there were to be cheers for the winner, most of them would be in French. They were.

But all of that was last May. In retrospect, it seems so petty now. Montreal's wizard of international intrigue had done it again. Drapeau had parlayed a magnificent double. He had followed Expo 67 with the Olympic Games. Make that a triple if you include the Expos. They have been a pleasant delight. For a time this year they were even No. 1.

But let's face it. This was a Drapeau victory, low key. That has been his trademark. And his track record is there for all to see. He has made it a habit of getting things done.

He sold Expo to the world, and got the federal treasury to foot the bill. The deficit was something like $122 million. But Montreal, and Canada, were on the map for all to see.

He sold the Expos too. He implied that if baseball was to come to Montreal, the team eventually would have a domed stadium to play under. The cost of a new stadium would be from $10 to $15 million. Fear not, baseball would have a new home.

The House of Seagram got the message. "Why don't we pay the franchise fee?" suggested Charlie Bronfman of the distillery firm. "Delighted," said Drapeau, and accepted the $10 million. The Expos were in.

But if that stadium is still only a dream, it won't be for long. Because now the Olympics are in clear view ahead. Five years is only a minuscule in the capsule of time. And something has to go up to put the Olympics in (and the Expos too). Now that $15 million tab is outdated. Already a figure of $50 million has been handed about. If the stadium is to have a dome, try $100 million. For the Olympics even more.

Recently the Olympic organizing committee was appointed. It consists of Drapeau, naturally; Harold Wright of Vancouver and Jim Worrall of Montreal. Worrall, a lawyer, was Canada's voting delegate at Amsterdam. Wright, an engineer, was an alternate sprinter on Canada's 1928 Olympic team. He also is the current COA president.

Wright was at Amsterdam as a B.C. delegate. If he was disappointed then at Garibaldi's loss, he otherwise was delighted at Canada's overall gain. He suggested then that the jealousies would soon disappear, once the initial shock wore off. They have.

Thus it becomes an all-Canada show, even though Garibaldi had the government's ear at the beginning. There was a grant available a year ago to help B.C. with expenses, but it has since gone elsewhere. In B.C.

Meanwhile, Montreal, and Drapeau had to foot their own bill. They did. And they sold a better bill of goods too.

And if it had a French-Canadian label, so what? In Europe, Canada is often spelled "Mon-die-a-d." Thanks to Drapeau, but it is still part of the country.

That's just in case you hadn't noticed — one whole year later.

Billy Reay Has Hint for Henri

CHICAGO (AP) — The mischievous grin crossed Billy Reay's face as the Chicago coach sat in his office after the tough 3-2 loss that Montreal Canadiens hung on to their Black Hawks to clinch the Stanley Cup Tuesday night.

Two goals by Henri Richard, whose emotional explosion against coach Al MacNeil rocked Montreal last weekend, had turned it around as the Canadiens clinched their 15th Cup in modern NHL history.

Richard had called MacNeil "incompetent" among other things.

"I guess now Henri will be able to say MacNeil is a great coach," Reay said.

Big Rookie, Reluctant Rebel Lead Canadiens to Cup Win

Ken Dryden Series Star; Richard Scores Two Goals

By IAN MACLAINE

CHICAGO (CP) — A towering rookie goaltending sensation and a reluctant rebel were the toast of Quebec today after leading Montreal Canadiens to the Stanley Cup Tuesday night with a 3-2 win over Chicago Black Hawks.

The victory in the deciding seventh game was the 10th National Hockey League title in 15 years for the Canadiens.

Goalie Ken Dryden, a 23-year-old law student at McGill University of Montreal, who played in only six league games before appearing in a record 20 post-season meetings, shared the accolades with centre-winger Henri Richard, a two-goal scorer Tuesday.

Dryden continued the superb play that has followed him since he became coach Al MacNeil's surprise starter against the defending champion Boston Bruins in this year's quarter-finals.

And Richard, playing on his 10th championship team, made the coach he was openly critical of less than a week ago look like a genius.

The fiery veteran, who labelled MacNeil "incompetent" because of the rookie coach's juggling of lines to combat Chicago's scoring power, skated both ways like a rookie and scored the tying and winning goals.

In face of home-ice domination through the Cup final, the Hawks were heavy favorites to take their first championship in 10 years when the two teams opened play here amidst a blistering heat wave that struck Chicago earlier in the week.

Hawks Jumped Into Two-Goal Lead

Chicago opened a two-goal lead, Dennis Hull scoring in the first and Danny O'Shea in the second, before the Montrealers put their game together.

Jacques Lemaire cut the Chicago lead in half with a blistering 60-footer, then passed to Richard for the tying score before the second period ended.

Richard tallied the winner early in the third period after taking a lead pass from Rejean Houle at the Chicago blue line, skating past defenceman Keith Magnuson and beating goalie Tony Esposito, who had been almost equal to Dryden throughout the series.

The victory was worth $8,250 a man to the Canadiens, who finished third in the East Division. Chicago, West Division champs, picked up $8,500 a Hawk in post-season earnings.

But there was no question that Dryden, an All-American at Cornell University before doing post-graduate studies at McGill, was the key playoff performer.

Superstar Frank Mahovlich came off his greatest playoff season ever with a record-tying 27 points and record 14 goals while taking a regular shift and killing penalties.

Chicago's great winger Bobby Hull, second to Mahovlich in the scoring despite the shadow effects of young Houle, was superb as usual.

But when all the ballots were tallied for the Conn Smyth Trophy, which goes to the most valuable playoff performer, the award and $1,500 went to Dryden.

Conn Smyth Trophy to Dryden

The trophy, originally voted on by league governors, was handed for the first time this year by representatives of the Professional Hockey Writers' Association from each league city.

In addition to the league award, Dryden, a Toronto native, also won a car from a national sports publication.

"This has to be the biggest goal I ever scored," said Richard, who only last Thursday, following Canadiens' 2-0 loss here, levelled his tirade at MacNeil, a first-year man behind the bench.

"Let's forget about it, let's talk about the goals instead," said Richard of his outburst against MacNeil.

"The big thing I feel now is relief that everything ended well. I've been on nine cup teams, but not like this — this was better, lots better."

Captain Jean Beliveau, who said rumors of his retirement after Tuesday's game were highly exaggerated, echoed Richard's comments on the rift within the club.

"That disagreement was settled in a few words last Saturday morning at our team meeting."

Of the victory, Beliveau said Chicago relied too much on too few throughout the series.

"Chicago have a good team, but they rely a bit too much on a few guys. We have more depth and that's the feeling I had all along."

Dryden, his lanky six-foot-four frame slouched in front of his cubicle, appeared awestruck by the sudden rise to NHL stardom. "I just can't believe it all coming together for me at once."

Chicago coach Billy Reay appeared baffled too, but for entirely different reasons.

Disappointed and disillusioned, Reay said: "It's been a very long season to wrap it all up in 20 minutes like we did tonight."

Big M Leads Point Parade

By THE CANADIAN PRESS — Although Frank Mahovlich was held scoreless Tuesday night as the Canadiens defeated Chicago Black Hawks 3-2 to win the Stanley Cup, the big Montreal left-winger finished atop the playoff scoring race with 27 points.

Mahovlich set a National Hockey League playoff record with 14 goals and his 27 points tied a playoff record set last year by Boston Bruins' Phil Esposito.

HULL SECOND Chicago's Bobby Hull picked up one assist Tuesday to finish in second place, two points behind Mahovlich. Hull ended with 11 goals, also second to Mahovlich.

Montreal's Yvan Cournoyer finished in a third-place tie with team-mate Jean Beliveau with 22 points. Beliveau set a record for most playoff assists with 16.

Jacques Lemaire, who helped lead Montreal to their Stanley Cup victory Tuesday with one goal and one assist, finished fifth with nine goals and 10 assists.

GLASGOW (CP) — Northern Ireland beat Scotland 1-0 in their British international soccer championship match here Tuesday night.

GRATEFUL PLAYERS jubilantly hoist Montreal coach Al MacNeil after deciding-game triumph in Chicago Stadium.

MONTREAL SALUTES CHAMPS WITH PARADE

MONTREAL (CP) — Mayor Jean Drapeau announced that Montreal Canadiens would be feted at a parade today "to celebrate the glorious victory of les Canadiens at Chicago."

Mayor Drapeau made the announcement hours after the Canadiens had won the Stanley Cup Tuesday night by downing Chicago Black Hawks 3-2 in the seventh game of their final series.

The parade was to leave the Forum around noon and make its way eastwards along downtown St. Catherine St. to City Hall, where the Stanley Cup champions were to be greeted with a 25-gun salute.

The team was to be introduced to the mayor and members of his administration.

Adanac Triumph Chills Burrards

VANCOUVER — Coquitlam Adanacs left Vancouver Burrards out in the cold by scoring a 17-13 victory over the winless team in a Western Lacrosse Association game here Tuesday night.

The win moved Adanacs into a three-way tie for first place in the four-team loop with Victoria Shamrocks and a New Westminster Salmonbellies.

However, two Vancouver players kept a bit of the chill off by topping the individual scoring chart.

Gord Fredrickson scored two goals and added two assists Tuesday to move past clubmate Ross McDonald into a one-point scoring lead. Fredrickson has 23 points from nine goals and 14 assists.

ROBINSON LEADS

Bill Robinson, who leads the league with 44 goals, is in a third-place tie with Wayne Shuttleworth of Coquitlam, each with 20 points.

Fifth-place Mike Gates of Coquitlam shares the assist lead with Fredrickson, each with 14.

Worst Conditions Ever—Mikita

Veteran Chicago centre Stan Mikita said the oppressive Chicago Stadium heat offered the worst hockey conditions he had ever played under and that the mid-80-degree temperatures had taken their toll on all the players.

"What's there to say?" replied Bobby Hull to reporters. "We had the lead in the series... and the lead in this game by two goals and we lose."

Veteran Eric Nesterenko, whose job it was to keep Frank Mahovlich in check, was a little more volatile.

"Something went wrong. Damned if it can be explained. We had the game in control and then we let go of it. That's the second time in two games we've done it."

He was referring to Sunday's 4-3 loss at Montreal to even the series at three games apiece when Frank Mahovlich and his brother, Peter, capitalized on bouncing pucks in the Chicago zone to score twice and turn the game from Chicago's favor.

Esposito, who appeared fooled on Lemaire's goal, said the haze that hovered in patches over the ice surface had nothing to do with him not making the save.

"I just missed it. No excuses," Lemaire said the shot "just took off and dropped sharply. Esposito just got a piece of his glove on it."

The Big M, another leading candidate for the Conn Smyth Award, agreed with Mikita in that "these were the worst conditions I've played in."

Houle, who carried on a long tradition of pests trying to keep Bobby Hull in check, felt the oppressive heat more than most.

At 165 pounds, Houle gives away 30 pounds to the Golden Jet and under ideal conditions finds the task difficult.

But a combination of heat and Hull's determination had a profound effect on the young rookie.

Palmer Takes Time Off To Get 'Game Together'

Times News Service
Arnold Palmer says he will take three weeks off to get his "game together" and prepare for the U.S. Open golf championship in Ardmore, Pa., June 17-20.

"I'm just not driving as well as I should, and that upsets me," Palmer said after playing in an exhibition match at the Spokane (Wash.) Golf and Country Club.

"I've been hitting iron shots well and putting fairly well, but have been getting in bad spots off the tee because of my drives," he said.

Palmer said he will play one more exhibition while he's off the tour, but no competition golf until the Charlotte, N.C., tournament a week before the Open.

Jack Nicklaus has to be rated No. 1 or 2 for the Open, Palmer said.

"Jack is playing better this year than ever. He's already won three tournaments and he can play the Merion course very, very well. He's proved that with some of his performances there in the past."

Latest figures released by the Professional Golfers Association Tournament Players' Division showed Nicklaus No. 1 in the money winning parade with $131,388.

Palmer is the only other player above $100,000, placing second with $106,196.

In the exemption point standings, based on tournament performances, Nicklaus leads with 130,607.5. Gary Player is second with 94,144.3. Hubert Green, winner of the Houston tournament, moved into ninth place with 58,704.6 points.

The top 10 money winners: 1. Jack Nicklaus $131,388; 2. Arnold Palmer $106,196; 3. Miller Barber $99,037; 4. Gary Player $94,775; 5. Tom Shaw $81,845; 6. Lee Trevino $78,833; 7. Frank Beard $74,444; 8. George Archer $72,658; 9. Billy Casper $69,779; 10. J. C. Snead $64,820.

Burrell Collects Ace But Loses Golf Match

Keith Burrell carded a hole-in-one Monday at Victoria Golf Club but still lost his match during the opening round of competition in the Junior Inter-Club Golf League.

The 17-year-old golfer stroked his tee-shot into the cup on the 166-yard 13th hole but still lost the match to Victoria's Dunc Conrad, 4 and 3.

Overall, the Uplands' team came up with a 5-4 win over Victoria.

In the other opening-round matches, host Cedar Hill trampled defending-champion Gorge Vale 6½-2½ and Royal Colwood nipped visiting Glen Meadows, 5-4.

Gorge Vale won the inaugural season last year with 27 points, one more than Uplands while Cedar Hill and Victoria finished in a tie for third place with 22½ points.

The league competes in match-play, round-robin fashion for five days. Next round is scheduled in two weeks.

Swim Clubs Unite For Sunday Meet

Two Victoria-area rivals will team up Sunday against out-of-town swimmers.

Victoria Olympians and Juan de Fuca Colours of Colwood will clash with the combined swim clubs of Port Angeles and Port Alberni in a meet beginning at 10 a.m. in the Crystal Garden.

The Victoria Day challenge event will be scored as a dual competition.

Admission charges are 75 cents for adults, 50 cents for children.

Plasterers Win Boxla Encounter

Victoria Van-Isle Plasterers trounced Saanich O.K. Tire 17-3 Tuesday in a South Vancouver Island Intermediate Lacrosse League game at Peakes Arena.

Kim Bowles, with five goals and two assists, as well as Don Ferguson, with two goals and five assists, paced the Victoria victory.

Consultant Caught

SWIFT CURRENT, Sask. (CP) John A. Patrick, a tax consultant here, Tuesday was fined $8,000 or 18 months in jail after he was found guilty on four charges of filing false income tax returns.

Troop Cut Weakens

CALGARY (CP) Any reduction in Nato forces in Europe would weaken the West and enable Russian forces to remain firm in their native and satellite territories, Sir Ian Jacob said Tuesday.

Sir Ian, former military assistant secretary to the war cabinet of Sir Winston Churchill, told a news conference that reunification has always been a prime objective in his view of East and West Germany.

City Plan Adopted

EDMONTON (CP) — A guide to the city's development until at least 1981 was adopted when city council gave third reading to a general plan bylaw. The plan had been under preparation since the early 1960s.

Tap Would Run

REGINA (CP) — Once a policy of exporting water to the United States is started it would not be possible to turn off the tap, Judge Harold Pope of Moose Jaw, chairman of the Saskatchewan Water Resources Commission, said here.

He told a Canadian Club meeting not enough is known about Canada's water resources or the cost of diverting water from the north, to begin discussing the export of water.

Sewage Taxed

SASKATOON (CP) — City Council has approved a new system for financing sewage collection and treatment which would more directly link usage with charges.

Under the new system, beginning Sept. 1, water bill surcharges will be dropped; cost of sewage treatment facilities will be removed from property taxes and be charged directly to users, and an additional levy will be made on users discharging a high waste concentration into the system.

Problems Faced

SASKATOON (CP) — The problems faced by "instant towns" established in remote areas are more sociological than architectural, J. G. Aldrich, town site development supervisor of Lorne Mining Corp. Ltd. of Vancouver, said. Aldrich told an audience at the trade fair Index '71 a major problem was attracting skilled labor and convincing them to stay in these areas.

Follow the Leader

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mayor Tom Campbell and two city aldermen will follow Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau's footsteps later this year and visit the Soviet Union.

City council received an invitation Tuesday from the city council in Odessa to visit there, and gave immediate approval for Mayor Campbell and two aldermen to make the trip.

No date was set for the trip. Mayor Campbell said he will name soon the two aldermen to accompany him.

B.C. News Briefs

Plebiscite Set

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council decided Tuesday that a plebiscite to determine whether Vancouver city will acquire a controversial waterfront site at the entrance to Stanley Park, instead of allowing the Four Seasons apartment development to go ahead, is to be held on June 23. A 60 per cent majority is required for the land acquisition proposal to gain approval.

Small Centres Hurt

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Smaller urban centres are "at the mercy of" local offices of mortgage lending institutions, that "have very limited allotments of mortgage funds and cannot make decisions regarding interest rates," the president of the Prince George Housing and Urban Development Association said Tuesday.

Al Anderson said that due to the geographical location of Prince George "it is difficult to persuade officers of mortgage lending institutions to invest larger sums of their money in this rapidly growing area at competitive interest rates."

People

WEST BERLIN — A 64-year-old former Nazi official Friedrich Bosshammer, was charged Tuesday with murder and complicity in the killing of 150,000 Jews during the Second World War.

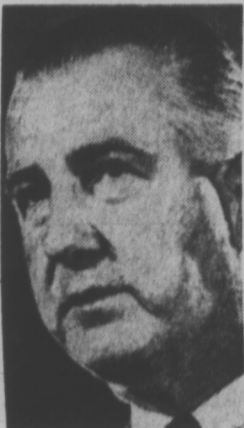

A date for the trial has not been fixed, a justice department spokesman said. Bosshammer worked from 1942 to 1944 in the late Adolf Eichmann's office.

SEATTLE — The U.S. tax court has ruled former Teamsters Union president Dave Beck owes more than $1 million, in underpaid taxes and penalties. The ruling was received here Tuesday by the Internal Revenue Service. An eight-day trial of the civil suit was held in February, 1969.

The court ruled that Beck and his late wife received substantial taxable income not reported in 1943-53 and 1958 and that "a part of each deficiency here involved was due to fraud with intent to evade taxes."

LOS ANGELES — John Fairfax and Sylvia Cook, the British adventurers who set out from San Francisco three weeks ago to row across the Pacific Ocean, are expected to arrive by the end of the week — in Los Angeles.

"They're out there somewhere and they're headed this way," said Emmet Ingraham of the Southern California Marine Radio Council, which is trying to keep track of the rowers.

AGNEW under fire

They were last seen by the freighter Export Courier which reported the couple shouted to them that they were all right, but their radio wasn't working, and they would row to Los Angeles to get it fixed.

NEW YORK — People here will have a chance this week to hit golf balls at a picture of Vice-President Spiro T. Agnew, for fun and charity.

A 10-foot-high photograph of the vice-president will be mounted between 150 and 200 feet from tees at a golf range in Queens, contestants can whack away with Agnew for a target.

The photo will be surrounded by 25 baskets and for every ball that drops into a basket, the golf range will contribute $10 to a fund for the building of a day care centre.

SEATTLE (UPI) — Leslie Bacon, 19-year-old antiwar activist, told the U.S. government Tuesday she has "nothing but contempt" for it.

The young woman continued to refuse answers to Federal Grand Jury questioning about the March 1 bombing of the U.S. Capitol.

About 25 young women demonstrated on the steps of the federal courthouse to protest the continued detention of Miss Bacon as a material witness in the capitol bombing. She has not been charged in the case. One of Miss Bacon's attorneys, Jennie Rhine, read a statement to the demonstrators which she said was written by the blonde 19-year-old. Part of the statement, read while Miss Bacon waved out a 10th floor window above the group, said:

"The government may try to lay contempt charges on me like the bombing charge. I have nothing but contempt for the American government."

A NEW BREED WITH EMPTY WASTE CANS

'Her Garbage is Always Perfect'

By SALLY GLOVER

They call it garbology. It's the art of collecting, separating and recycling garbage.

Webster's and Oxford may not have the word yet but it's an important addition to the vocabulary of several Victorians.

Those who practise garbology even have the city garbage collectors stumped.

An average family leaves about two cans, full of "want-nots" per week. What the men in white can't figure out is how a family of nine, at 2580 Bowker, leaves only one-quarter of a can of garbage for sometimes two weeks.

"I'm sure they must think we're starving in here," says Mrs. Peter Henderson, mother of the garbology-practising clan.

"I've been not wasting things for years," she said as she pointed to the panoramic array of separated garbage on the back porch. "I've always taken my left-over fat to the butcher. He adds it to his and its sent to Chemainus and recycled as soap."

Now she takes all her separated garbage to the Gonzales Bay Recycling Group.

"Her garbage is always perfect," says Craig Butler, whose home is the major depot in Gonzales Bay.

Garbage usually has to be re-separated before it's marketed.

Mrs. Henderson keeps her fat drippings in the cooler, boils the meat off the bones and puts them in a plastic container. Aluminum is squashed and neatly stacked in another container, as are tin cans, delabelled and flattened with their labels placed in the recyclable paper box. (The Gonzales Bay Recycling Group has just recently found a market for tin cans, shipping them to Tilbury Island on the Fraser River delta island for $10 a ton.)

Her paper, which includes junk mail, paper towels and napkins if not too soiled, cigarette and toothpaste packages and writing paper, she folds and puts in with her tin can label box.

There is still no apparent market for newspaper.

Egg cartons, corrugated cardboard boxes and magazines can be reused, too. The compost heap receives most of the remaining garbage. Anything that doesn't draw rats and is organic is great, she says.

"It's a matter of five to 10 minutes a day. It's quite automatic and sort of fun. I don't mind being organized and you're not messing around with it, you're getting rid of it in a profitable way."

Mrs. Henderson is quite optimistic about the outcome of the recycling project.

"If it's going to work anywhere, it should be Victoria. There's a common goodness here where everyone knows what's going on. In other areas, people are too worried about keeping their body and soul together."

Separating garbage is enforced in some parts of England and enthusiastic citizens in Berkeley, Calif., have successfully set up a recycling program, which will also provide jobs for minority groups. According to an Environment 100 bulletin from the University of Victoria, the Berkeley initiatives will not be satisfied until the city establishes a regular recycling program of all wastes.

There isn't much, and what there is now, is getting crowded.

Contents of each depot box are brought to Butler's front yard. His garage is full. As tin cans are only marketable by the ton, a storehouse of some kind is needed.

"We're trying to make this as much a community effort as possible," says John Seville, co-ordinator of the group.

And why this zest for the possibilities garbage offers? The garbologists say Canadians waste too much, and their resources are running out. So, recycle.

Museum Grabs Collection Of Old Household Objects

The Provincial Museum has paid $25,000 for the entire collection of late 19th and early 20th century historical objects from a private museum near Ladysmith.

The collection was owned by 64-year-old John Watson, operator of the Crossroad Museum.

History curator Dan Gallagher said 15,000 objects were involved in the purchase deal.

"There are mostly household items, but the collection also includes a Model T. truck and a threshing machine," he said. "The great weight of the objects were in use between 1890 and 1921."

The bulk of the items will be used in a street scene in the human history display now under construction.

"We were lucky to get this collection," he said. "They were mostly collected 'on Vancouver Island'."

The historic household goods are in the process of being packed by a group of volunteers for shipment to a hangar at Patricia Bay where they will be stored.

The items will then be taken in relays to the museum for fumigation before display.

Volunteers will catalogue the items this summer.

POWER KNOCKED OUT IN LANGFORD

Westerly winds up to 39 miles per hour knocked out power in part of Langford this morning when branches fell on a line at Rowles Crescent.

Power was out between 6:35 a.m. and 7:30 a.m. a B.C. Hydro-spokesman said today.

A ridge of high pressure off the west coast of Vancouver Island created the wind which is expected to decrease to 29 tonight.

The system will bring mainly sunny and warmer weather for the next two days, the weather office at Victoria International Airport said.

Gov't Prepares For Evictions At Rest Homes

By DON VIPOND

Emergency plans have been made by the provincial government and local hospitals in case rest home operators carry through their threat to evict welfare patients.

And John Hanrahan of Victoria, vice-president of the B.C. Rest Home Association, said today the evictions "will soon be taking place."

He had said earlier the provincial government would receive no further warning when but added today the association believes the government "has made some arrangements."

The association meets in Vancouver tonight to consider the next move in its fight with the province over grants paid by government to rest home operators for welfare patient care.

SKETCHY DETAILS

Well over 300 people in Greater Victoria rest homes would be involved if there was a mass eviction of welfare cases.

While details on what the province would do were sketchy this morning, it was understood they would involve the Emergency Measures Organization if necessary and emergency accommodation, possibly in public buildings.

But first would come medical screening of those evicted to see which ones qualified for hospitalization.

MAY USE LOBBY

Dr. Emert Van Tilburg, executive director at St. Joseph's Hospital, said today cases directed to the hospital will be received on the same priority basis as other patients.

They will be examined and if they don't need hospital care, they won't be admitted.

If necessary the hospital will establish a receiving area, possibly in the lobby, as it would in the event of any disaster, where cases could

Hospital Wants Union Decertified

The administrator of Sandringham Private Hospital has applied to the B.C. Labor Relations Board to decertify the union which has been on strike for 232 days in a bid for a first contract.

Mrs. Margaret Reynolds, the administrator, said it has been more than 10 months since the Canadian Union of Public Employees was certified "and the law says if there is no contract within 10 months, application can be made for decertification."

Union representative Alex Markides said the move is "a frivolous request" without rhyme or reason.

It is expected to be several weeks before the B.C. Labor Relations Board makes its decision.

VAN TILBURG emergency basis

he screened, examined and tagged.

If it has to, the hospital could accommodate people on an emergency basis in sun-rooms, classrooms and conference rooms.

Van Tilburg estimated St. Joseph's might be able to handle 50 people for a brief time on that basis if the need was desperate enough.

PROVINCE GIVES MEAGRE AID

Rest home welfare patients on pension cost the provincial government about $5.25 a month, according to Victoria welfare department accounts.

This is because most pensioners in rest homes receive $135 a month from the federal government, the maximum pension. The province pays $150 a month for welfare patients in rest homes.

Pensioners in Victoria rest homes turn their cheques over to the homes' operators who then bill city welfare for the difference between the pension and the $150.

In most cases this is only $15.

Under the federal welfare cost-sharing plan, the province pays 35 per cent of this amount.

In the case of rest homes, this would be about $5.25 if the bill to city welfare is $15. The rest of the money is divided between the federal government and municipal governments.

If a pensioner receives less than $135 a month from Ottawa, the provincial share would, of course, be proportionately greater. But it still would be only 35 per cent of the difference between the pension and the provincial rate of $150.

Blood Donor Goal Missed

Victorians gave 190 pints of blood, 60 short of the 250-pint goal, during the Red Cross blood drive Monday and Tuesday.

The next blood drive will be Monday, May 31, from 2 to 4 p.m. at Royal Roads Military College.

The drive is open to residents in the Royal Roads vicinity.

Final Uvic Marks Ready for Mailing

University of Victoria students who are getting short on fingernails can start relaxing.

Their final marks for the past school year are almost on the way.

Uvic registrar Ron Perry said today a meeting of the university senate tonight will approve the marks.

"Marks of the graduating class will be mailed out after the meeting," he said. "We'll start mailing the others tomorrow."

Perry said it was standard practice to mail graduates' marks first, with undergraduates getting theirs later.

He said he expected the last of the marks to be received by students next week.

Greater Victoria School Board gave strapping a go-round at its Monday evening session. Good enough, but I wish that child psychiatrist Dr. Philip Ney hadn't chosen to make the teacher the villain of his presentation.

I don't like to take issue with anyone in Ney's profession. To do so makes me acutely aware of my own squirming little neuroses. Nevertheless, when Dr. Ney suggests that the teacher should substitute a punching bag in the staff room for student flesh, I think he is talking pure piffle.

There may be rare teachers who like to lay on the strap. But the vast majority don't, and if they resort to strapping at all, do so only when other corrective procedures have drawn a blank.

Talks with parents, for instance. Attempts to persuade, the determined classroom disrupter into a change of attitude, or to channel his aggression into activities that will give it scope. Detentions. Perhaps a cooling-off period of exile from the arena.

Sometimes one or other of these methods does the trick. But by no means always—and here we come to what the teacher should have in the staffroom.

Not a punching bag but a psychiatrist, ready and able to go to work on child problems with which no teacher can or should be expected to cope.

It would also be necessary for the psychiatrist to do what he can with those parents who expect the school to magic the product of their failures and mistakes into a responsible human being.

That would take a lot of time, and no end of money. It's so much cheaper, and easier to damn the teacher.

a million each), tell in love with a Lilliputian appearing on the same bill, an exquisite little man whose wit and charm made him seem many times larger than life. Incredibly, they were a handsome couple at the wedding where, when asked how it had all come about, the mischievous groom replied, "Somebody put me up to it."

Another longtime friend of mine, Ronald Street, a British-born entertainer who is three-foot-six and billed as "The Cheeky Chappy," also took as his bride a dear girl who towered over him and sired a brood of a boy named Danny Lee who now, at 16 is nearly twice as tall as his tiny dad, but knows who's boss.

Ronnie would be the first to spurn an organization of little people. In a world of giants he found his own stature and became a bigger man than many who loom above him.

My visitors made it clear that they are very often sensitive about their nearness to the ground and voiced the wishful hope that, like the members of equally girth organizations of tall people, they might be more at ease with people at their own altitude. It was this, in fact, that had brought them together and the point would have to be conceded that, in tandem, their shortness was less apparent.

But the question that immediately occurred to me was this: where do you draw the line in arbitrarily seeking out companions with such a common denominator? If organizations of the very tall or the very short are to become a vogue then why not organizations of people with prematurely grey hair or large noses or jug ears or knock knees?

It seems more likely to me that any such voluntary grouping would only serve to emphasize the handicap, if such it is. I do not wish to join an organization of people with large noses, though I would automatically make it unanimously as president, because I do not care to admit that it is a disability. If I were four feet high I would not seek the company of other men four feet high and thus concede that it is a liability, which it need not be.

Shortness, indeed, is more often an asset since it almost always causes a compensating aggressiveness. Napoleon, Alexander the Great, and Richard the Lion-Hearted were the classic cases, but look at a man like Mickey Rooney who made it to the altar with seven brides, not one of whom cared a will that he has trouble reaching the high shelves.

The truth is I'm an anti-organization man all the way down the line. I oppose racial or religious organizations in which the members are really trying to escape in the protective coloring of their fellows. I oppose organizations that put up any kind of barriers or which come into existence merely because their membership shares an irritation or a fad. I am cool to the Junior League, all Caledonian societies, all businessmen's service clubs, all groups which put up walls of limiting interests and aims.

I've never been a joiner simply because the things I'm asked to join are almost always insular. When B'nai B'rith opens its membership to the MacTavishes and the St. Andrew's Society opens its membership to the Cohens then I may think of belonging.

When the four-foot-three people meet in one hall and the six-foot-seven people meet in another, it seems to me, they're isolating themselves into boxes in a society already far too compartmentalized. No "Hubba Hubba Girl" awaits the little men in Five And Under.

Price, Wage Controls Urged by Rebel Grit

TORONTO (CP) — Paul Hellyer says "disaster is too mild a word" to describe the Liberal government economic policies that have allowed increasing inflation and high unemployment to sweep the country.

Hellyer, former transport minister who resigned from the Trudeau cabinet two years ago but still sits as Liberal MP for Toronto Trinity, said the Liberal government's economic policy is based on "a tired old interpretation of the 19th century."

He called for mandatory price and wage controls as the only way to get the economy back on the road toward full employment while keeping prices in check.

In a speech to the Council of Printing Industries of Canada, Hellyer, who quit the cabinet in a dispute over housing policies in 1969, said many excuses have been advanced against use of wage and price controls. But he added:

"There is no alternative to mandatory price and wage guidelines if we are to pursue vigorously and effectively the twin goals of full employment and stable prices at the same time."

Such mandatory guides he said, would not involve the degree of regulation in wage and price controls during the Second World War.

Hellyer said it was a misconception to view the Canadian economy as a free market in many cases, industries had quasi-monopoly power in setting prices and unions had similar control over wages.

He said there had been two approaches to the wage-price problem: The first was an attempt to increase competition and it was completely ineffective.

"The idea that it will work as an ultimate solution is naive in the extreme... Big business and big unions are here to stay."

The second approach, "so-called voluntary guidelines," achieved modest success but had no prospect of achieving complete stability.

Hellyer suggested that "in cases where either business or labor exercise monopoly power or the equivalent of monopoly power, their actions must meet the test of the public interest."

"Monopoly power, no matter what it is called, has to be restrained. Abuse of power by a privileged minority does violence to the principles of a free society."

His guides would limit profits to a certain level of return on capital invested or on sales. The level of return would be based on the company's long-term experience.

Wage increases would be limited to the average increase in output per person in the labor force.

Companies would still set their own prices and wages would be negotiated between management and labor.

The real frightening prospect is not wage and price guidelines to control monopoly power, he said, but "the necessity for our economic decision-makers to do original thinking."

"It is obvious that traditional solutions won't do. Solutions that have been tried and that have failed consistently should not be repeated." Perhaps most serious of all, he said, people are losing faith in themselves and their government.

ABOARD CUTTER DUANE (AP) — A delegation of U.S. lobstermen and government officials met at sea today with the Soviet Union's Atlantic fishing fleet to discuss charges of harassment of American fishing boats.

The U.S. delegation travelled aboard the coast guard cutter Duane to a rendezvous point near the Nantucket Lightship, 80 miles southeast of Boston, for the talks aboard the Soviet factory ship Ehyke, a floating processing plant for the 120-vest Soviet fleet.

The American delegation, headed by a state department fisheries expert, arranged for the meeting after the commander of the Soviet fleet said he could not come ashore.

"We hope to point out to the Soviets, in very strict words if necessary, the adverse effects they are having on American fishing and that we hope they will co-operate with us," said rights of others on the high seas."

U.S. lobstermen have reported several incidents of Soviet trawlers sweeping through their buoyed lines and causing extensive damage to fishing gear. The latest complaint was lodged Tuesday by the New Bedford trawler Susan Y, which reported two incidents of harassment by Soviet-bloc trawlers in the area chosen for the meeting.

Arctic Walruses ...

By DEV. MAURARKA

MOSCOW (The London Observer) — Soviet scientists are basing their forecasts of ice conditions in the Arctic ocean on the movement of walruses. This is the latest in a series of discoveries which is forcing scientists the world over to go back to studying animals in order better to understand natural phenomena. It is also making them cautious about dismissing old wives' tales, which they now find contain grains of experienced truth.

The discovery about the walruses is particularly exciting for the Russians because they are always the most concerned about ice conditions in the Arctic and regularly spend a fortune on studying weather conditions there. During an observation flight a Soviet plane came upon a gathering of walruses amidst solid, impassable ice. This struck the observers as unusual since normally walruses, though they live on ice, never go very far from the shallow coastal regions since they need easy access to open water.

The observers therefore concluded that if the walruses were on solid ice they must be expected to melt away. Their curiosity was even more aroused when, on returning to their base, they met an old sailor who heard their story and remarked: "If walruses get on to solid ice, it is no longer solid." Sure enough in two weeks' time, there were only ice floes where previously there had been solid ice.

PROVED RIGHT

The following year, the weather-watchers made a special effort to observe the walruses. On one occasion, when they discovered a particularly large group of them on solid ice, they issued an official forecast that it would disappear in about 10 days. They were proved to be right. Their skepticism about the walruses, however, did not entirely vanish.

... Turn Teacher

In 1969 they again encountered a very large group of them in an area where weather conditions were impossible and the ice so thick that they just could not think it would melt away in the near future. But the walruses knew better.

During 1970 the weathermen relied more upon walruses than on their own investigations for accurate forecasts of ice conditions and each time their forecasts proved to be right.

Scientists are puzzled by this discovery. One theory is that the walruses have some natural way of distinguishing the warm streams that move under solid ice and they follow the currents of such streams. It is also easier for them to distinguish these currents because their food supplies mainly come from the areas marking the boundary between warm and cold water.

ICE DRIFT

The walruses not only help in forecasting the melting of ice in the Arctic ocean. With the approach of winter they also give indications of the direction of the ice drift. When they start leaving an area, it is a sure sign of the advance of drifting ice. The Soviet scientists say that as yet they have not found any means either to identify warm currents under the ice or to forecast the Arctic weather conditions three or four weeks ahead as accurately as the walruses do. But they have already decided that watching the behavior of walruses is henceforth going to be a part of their ice and hydrological reconnaissance.

Man's growing need for the sea, for food as well as for other treasures, has speeded up oceanographic research all over the world and the Russians have devoted a large share of their resources and energy to it.

For centuries, till the sea routes to India were discovered, Russia was the main road of the traffic between east and west. Its land routes were difficult and romantic and gradually ceased to be used and this role of Russia was hardly even remembered. But the arrival of planes capable of flying long distances and improved methods of ship construction which now make them fit even for the tough conditions of the Arctic have revived Soviet interest in opening up these routes again.

The Soviet authorities are interested perhaps less for political reasons than for economic ones, since it can be a lucrative business in many ways. Already the Soviet routes, whether by sea, land or air, to Japan are attracting enormous western interest.

OTTAWA (CP) — A new independent agency to test and develop farm machines was recommended Tuesday in a royal commission report on farm machinery.

The report, prepared by Dr. Clarence L. Barber, University of Manitoba economist and head of the six-year, $1.5 million commission, was tabled in the Commons by Agriculture Minister H. A. Olson.

Dr. Barber told a news conference improvements in farm machinery have done most to reduce farm implement costs in the last 50 years.

An independent agency for research and testing to develop better farm machines and to help individual farmers choose implements "might save Canadian farmers a good deal and help them remain competitive on world markets."

A five- to seven-per-cent saving could come from limiting then stopping manufacturers from supplying dealers with floor samples and an inventory of machines free of interest for as long as 23 months. Cost of this practice now is passed on to farmers buying the machines.

The basic recommendation of the commission is that the government consider implementing a program to "encourage farm mechanization and to smooth its advancement." Such a program should:

—Ensure sufficient research and development into farm machinery to provide a continuing flow of new machinery technology suited to Canadian requirements; —Provide facilities for measuring and evaluating the work of new machines to ensure efficient use by farmers;

—Promote a co-operative relationship between manufacturers, distributors and farm machinery users;

—Minimize the adverse effects of mechanization on the health, safety and welfare of the agricultural community;

—Provide credit facilities and capital-formation incentives to encourage an adequate rate of investment for farm mechanization.

The commission also recommends extension of the Farm Improvements Loans Act and introduction of similar guaranteed loan plans for dealers to allow them to finance their own inventories.

Skilled Jobless Pool

100 MILE HOUSE (CP) — The British Columbia government is creating "the best-trained pool of unemployed anywhere in the western world" provincial NDP leader Dave Barrett said Tuesday night.

He said a government with ideas and imagination could "grasp world attention" by putting young trained people to work on such problems as rapid transit methods, electric-powered cars to help solve the pollution crisis, and reclamation projects to boost tourism.

Barrett said the Social Credit government during the last session of the legislature promised to create 25,000 new jobs. But B.C.'s jobless total in April was 72,000, up from 58,000 in April last year.

World Red Cross To Modernize Rules of War

By THOMAS PATRICK
The Manchester Guardian
GENEVA—The vice-president of the International Red Cross committee, Jean Pictet, announced here that an international meeting of experts would be held in Geneva between May 24 and June 12 to try to bring the organization's charter into line with the realities of modern warfare.

Since the Geneva agreement of 1949, conventional warfare has given way to guerrilla warfare on an unprecedented level, leaving the committee with an outmoded set of humanitarian rules of war.

But the cautious international committee, composed exclusively of Swiss nationals, stressed that the meeting would be a "preparatory" one of about 40 nations to thrash out additions to the 1949 convention, which would then be submitted to a world-wide conference for diplomatic action. "That might be achieved in two years," Pictet said.

"We must be realistic about the political necessities of reasonable requests by governments."

Of those countries invited to send experts to the Geneva meeting, three have declined—China, Cuba and Pakistan. Four have not answered—Algeria, Argentina, Burma and Nigeria. Of the larger powers, the United States, Britain, Soviet Union, Japan and France have accepted. Pictet pointed out that in the era of guerrilla wars, others and take note of all internal conflicts—civil wars and guerrilla operations—have caused more suffering than conventional international wars.

"Our aim is to bring the convention up to date so that we can be in a better position to send our people into troubled areas to help civilians, to stop summary capital punishment, to receive pledges against the bombing of civilian targets and blockades such as that which occurred in Nigeria (during the 30-month Biafran rebellion).

"It is essential that mistreatment of all political prisoners stop too and we feel that is our role."
On guerrilla warfare, Pictet said: "We must define what is terrorism because it produces counter-terrorism and we must respect The Hague Convention on this and bring it up to date."
"No army will follow those rules if the opposing side does not do so."
"We must define what is military target. A civilian working in an arms plant of a country at war must expect to be vulnerable. But once he has gone home his status changes."

"Since 1949 the problems have become much more difficult... much more fiery."
"While the technicians of war have made giant strides, he said, the written laws regulating them have stood still. The Hague conventions date back to 1907 when air raids were unheard of."

Deadwood Dick Due at McPherson

Deadwood Dick, super-hero of 19th century melodramas, will walk the boards again May 26 to 29 at the McPherson Playhouse, as part of the Victorian Days Festival.

The play, a dramatization of episodes taken from dime novels written by Edward L. Wheeler in the 1870s, will feature an assortment of heroines, heroes, and villains.

VAUDEVILLE

Sing-songs and vaudeville acts will be part of the evenings' entertainment.

The performances will begin at 8 p.m. on May 26 and 27 and at 6 p.m. and 9 p.m. on May 28 and 29.

To start the Victorian Days celebrations off officially the S.S. Beaver under the command of Captain Jim Gracie will sail from the Inner Harbor at 1 p.m., Sunday, May 23 with about 100 staff members of the Hudson's Bay Company dressed in period costumes.

The cruise has been arranged in recognition of the company's efforts in making the Beaver into an historic museum.

LOGGER SPORTS

On Monday, May 24 some 40 of the world's top loggers will compete in the Victorian Days logging sports events between 2 and 4 p.m. in the Inner Harbor.

All people who have had their names drawn for one of the Victorian Days treasure hunts including those drawn May 27 will be eligible to dig in the final grand treasure hunt May 29, at 11 a.m., at Willows Beach.

The treasure hunters will be digging for cash certificates totalling $2,000.

After the dig the winner of the Queen's Chest containing $1,000 in B.C. Centennial dollars will be drawn.

CITY COFFEE HOTTEST ITEM OF LAST YEAR

Coffee was the hottest seller in the City of Victoria's food concessions in 1970.

At 140,049 cups, it was well ahead of the next best seller, chocolate bars, consumed to the tune of 100,135.

The food concessions are in the Memorial Arena, the city hall cafeteria, McPherson Playhouse, Crystal Garden, Royal Athletic Park and Mount Douglas Park.

The concession stands also sold more than 91,000 hot dogs, 10,000 hamburgers and 57,467 cartons of pop corn.

The information is contained in the 1970 report of the recreation and community services department.

The report also shows that subsidization of the McPherson Playhouse is decreasing.

The subsidy per patron in 1965 was 46.3 cents, but by last year it had dropped to 12.1 cents. In 1969 the figure was 12.7 cents.

The hourly cost of operating the McPherson was $32.96. The Crystal Garden cost $37.80 an hour to operate, the Memorial Arena cost $67.04.

WCB Honors Amputee

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Nanaimo man who lost both arms in a 1964 pulp mill accident and later earned a degree from the University of Victoria helped open a three-storey addition to the Workmen's Compensation Board building here Tuesday.

Allen Brett, who now holds a personnel office job with MacMillan Bloedel Ltd., and Judge C. W. Tysoe of the B.C. Appeal Court cut the ribbon to open the 65,000-square-foot addition.

Eight Admitted to Bar

Eight articled law students from Victoria formally became lawyers Tuesday as part of the largest call and admission ceremony in the history of the B.C. Law Society.

Among 104 called to the B.C. bar, the students became barristers and solicitors in a ceremony at the Law Courts before Mr. Justice J. S. Aikins.

Making the presentation was Donald Lawson, one of two benches from Victoria on the B.C. Law Society.

The eight are Mohan Jawl, James Clapp, Larry Assaly, Rod MacDonald, Mike Hutchison, Robert Macfarlane, Gary Tindall and Berle Whittaker. While the others will work in other parts of the province, Hutchison, Tindall and Jawl will stay here.

Attending the ceremony was T. J. Halbert, former city lawyer who became B.C. Supreme Court registrar May 1.

Students Protest

TORONTO (CP) — An unruly crowd of 400 high school students hurled firecrackers into the Ontario legislature building Tuesday, demanding that provincial government justify cuts in education spending.

At one point, about 25 teen-agers bolted past guards and ran through three floors of Queen's Park chanting "We want Davis" but Premier William Davis was not in his office.

The students were evicted.

Before the Judge

An inmate of William Head minimum security prison got lenient treatment Tuesday from Victoria provincial court Judge William Ostler so that he could discontinue what the judge termed a "sordid life".

Police testified Thompson cashed the cheques last October, one month before he was given a three-year sentence for attempted uttering.

Thompson told the court he was involved in a rehabilitation program "to find out whether I'm insane or not", and said that extra time would not be beneficial to him.

Ostler said the two-year sentence was "a compassionate sentence, done in a desire to encourage you."

Donald Whittaker, 29, 295 Qu'Appelle, who pleaded guilty to eight counts of wrongfully obtaining unemployment insurance benefits was fined $280 by Ostler.

Whittaker, was given eight months to pay.

Bruce W. Selman, 19, of HMCS Mackenzie, was fined $50 for careless driving by Judge E. P. N. Robinson in traffic court.

Gerald E. Cairns, 19, of 4917 Searidge Dr. was found guilty of dangerous driving and fined $150, with his licence revoked for four months except for business purposes. A charge of driving with blood-alcohol content of over .08% was withdrawn.

Robinson imposed a 14-day jail term on Frank Hughes, 34, of 2544 Prior, who pleaded guilty to driving while impaired April 23 in Victoria. Hughes was also given a partial five-month driving ban.

Possession of a small amount of marijuana led to a fine of $300 for Daniel F. Haggerty, 22, of 1006 Tolmie. Haggerty pleaded guilty.

Blame Self Canada Told

OTTAWA (CP) — A United States management consultant said Tuesday the lack of Canadian pressure for a joint Canadian-U.S. energy policy is part of the reason the U.S. now is considering sea transportation of Alaskan Oil to Washington State.

Herbert Winokur of Washington, D.C., told the special Commons committee on environmental pollution that if Canada had applied pressure for a joint energy policy, a land pipeline through Canada might well be favored by U.S. interests.

The committee is carrying out a study of the possible environmental effects of carrying crude oil by tanker to a refinery at Cherry Point on Puget Sound from Valdez, Alaska.

Constitutional Trade-Off by Quebec?

Bourassa Hints At Winning Hand In High-Stakes Canadian Game

By DON MACPHERSON

QUEBEC (CP) — Premier Robert Bourassa heads for the west next month and a high-stakes constitutional poker game in which he feels he's already holding the best cards.

The 37-year-old Liberal premier's biggest advantage will probably be the desire of some of the other players to bring home something after the next constitutional conference, to be held June 14-16 in Victoria.

Mr. Bourassa wants Ottawa and the other provinces to accept Quebec's position in the field of income security.

In return, he appears ready to accept the proposed constitutional amending formula that came out of the last constitutional conference in Ottawa Feb. 8-9.

His ace-in-the-hole is the apparent satisfaction of the other governments with the amending formula, which they would like to show as an accomplishment in the constitutional talks.

TRADE-OFF HINTED

Mr. Bourassa did not specifically say Tuesday he would attempt a trade-off but his statements before the Quebec national assembly's committee on the constitution suggested as much.

Mr. Bourassa said Tuesday there is widespread "impatience" in Quebec and throughout Canada with the results of the constitutional discussions, which have been going on since the early 1960s.

"However, we cannot sacrifice to this legitimate impatience the essence of our positions in matters of constitutional revision," he told the Quebec national assembly's standing committee on the constitution.

The amending formula was "a tactical advantage for Quebec" in its campaign to persuade the reluctant federal government to hand over predominance in legislation and administration of income-security programs.

"It's up to me and the present government to decide upon the most effective strategy," Mr. Bourassa said.

"This amending formula constitutes a tactical advantage for Quebec. I will have to see to what point Quebec should use this tactical advantage to settle the questions which appear fundamental to it."

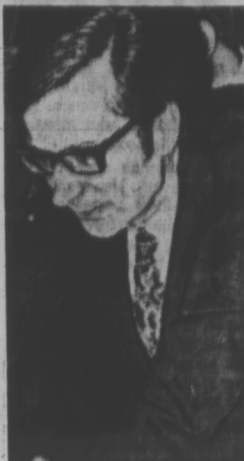

QUESTION FUNDAMENTAL

Mr. Bourassa said the amending formula is a "formal question" while the distribution of constitutional powers in the field of income security is an example of a "fundamental question".

He said he does not see how Quebec can accept solutions to "formal questions" such as the amending formula "without at least the important fundamental questions being settled."

Timing was important in determining Mr. Bourassa's constitutional strategy.

Holding off acceptance of the amending formula until after all the "fundamental questions" had been resolved might pose

BOURASSA
... set for deal

"risks to the pace of constitutional revision, since we are not the only ones negotiating."

"We have to negotiate with partners," Mr. Bourassa said. "It is up to us to show judgment as to the way in which Quebec will gain the most advantages in this revision and to use the most effective strategy."

WON'T GIVE LIST

He rejected for strategic reasons the idea of presenting a complete list of the constitutional powers Quebec wants.

"If we said, 'this is what we want', what kind of negotiating position would we be in," he asked.

Mr. Bourassa's statements suggest that his fellow constitutional negotiators will find out in Victoria that Quebec's attitude toward the constitutional talks remains unchanged from February.

At the last conference, at which the amending formula was worked out behind closed doors, observers and participants had the impression that Mr. Bourassa was trying to make a deal involving the amending formula and income-security powers.

Mr. Bourassa himself shrugged off questions about any possible trade.

He said the two questions were separate but that discussions on each should continue at the same time to get agreements as soon as possible.

He would not say clearly Tuesday whether Quebec would refuse to accept the amending formula if its position on income security were rejected, but he did speak favorably of the formula itself.

CALLED IMPROVEMENT

He tried several times without much apparent success to convince opposition members of the committee that the formula is acceptable.

He described it as an improvement over the present situation, in which the British North America Act can only be amended by address to the British Parliament, and over the ill-fated Fulton-Favreau amending formula of 1964.

Benson Resurrects Spectre of Inflation

By KEVIN DOYLE
OTTAWA (CP) — Finance Minister Edgar Benson says renewed inflation poses a very real threat to the Canadian economy and that the danger is heightened by continuing high wage and salary increases.

He told the Commons Tuesday that "wage and salary increases are still running at a level that is not justifiable either in terms of increased productivity or increases in the cost of living."

His remarks were aimed primarily at turning back New Democrat arguments "that the government should spend any amount of money needed to increase employment and economic growth even though this might lead to more inflation."

The House was debating an NDP motion urging the government to adopt immediate emergency economic measures to stimulate the economy and reduce unemployment, which reached a seasonally-adjusted high of 6.7 per cent in April, compared with six per cent in March.

Under Commons rules, the motion did not come to a vote.

DEBATE PUBLIC ORDER

Today the House resumes debate on a government motion to set up a Commons-Senate committee to study the need for special legislation to replace the Public Order (Temporary Measures) Act, 1970, which expired April 30.

The Public Order Act was passed in December, replacing regulations under the War Measures Act, invoked Oct. 16 to deal with terrorist kidnappings in Quebec.

The sharpest attack on government economic policies Tuesday came from Max Saltzman (NDP-Waterloo).

The Galt, Ont., native managed to attract about 100 MPs to the hot, stuffy Commons chamber for a wide-ranging blast at what he called the government's ignorant, incompetent, dishonest and arrogant approach to economic problems.

He said the government must make funds available to municipalities and businesses in addition to stepping up federal programs. Greater assistance should be given to housing projects, hospitals and research centres. Old-age pensions should be increased and taxes on low-income earners decreased.

The government should cut special tax concessions to firms involved in mining and resource development and make this assistance available to industries employing larger amounts of labor.

BENSON UP EAST

Mr. Benson was on his feet before Mr. Saltzman sat down.

The minister chided Mr. Saltzman for implying that the government had wrecked the economy.

"I think that many other countries of the world would like to have an economy that is wrecked the way the Canadian economy is wrecked."

He said a proposal by Mr. Saltzman that a prices review board be set up and that some bargaining power removed from some unions likely would be impossible to administer.

He said his earlier predictions that the economy would expand gradually through the year still were correct. The high unemployment rate in April was disconcerting and troublesome because it broke a pattern of continual improvement.

STANFIELD RESERVED

Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield delivered a low-key, rambling review of unemployment statistics and the history of the government's efforts to curb inflation.

He reiterated his frequent plea for selective tax cuts to increase consumer purchasing power and stimulate the economy. He described the government's regional development programs as a farce that had done nothing to promote economic equality in Canada.

Mr. Benson said increased unemployment in April may have been caused by a number of temporary factors including a generally severe, long winter in most parts of the country which delayed many spring activities.

The basic aim of the government was to achieve high levels of employment and stable prices, he added.

The United States experienced 6.1 per cent unemployment in April, Mr. Benson said, compared with 5.8 per cent in February.

"The federal government has adopted a wide-ranging series of measures to encourage expansion of production and employment in those regions and industries most adversely affected by slow economic growth."

"A further large boost will be provided to the economy from the fiscal policies of the federal government during the current year."

John Lundrigan (PC-Gan-dar-Twillington) said the government should spend less money promoting equality for the English and French languages in Canada and more on developing the economy.

He said in one area on the west coast of Newfoundland, French-speaking residents had been assimilated by the English-speaking majority years ago. But the federal government now had decided to make this a bilingual district.

Bruce Howard (L-Okanagan-Boundary) said Canadians must be prepared to accept a lower standard of living if they want full employment.

Jack Horner (PC-Crowfoot) said other countries have been able to balance employment and inflation without losing control of either.

Grace MacInnis (NDP-Vancouver-Kingsway) said government economic policies have been particularly hard on young people. They were learning to live without work and this attitude would spread.

Rene Matte (SC-Champlain) said the government should expand credit to consumers. Price increases would be taken care of by increased purchasing power.

MINISTER SAYS 'WAIT'

Trade Minister Jean-Luc Pepin said Canadians should wait until the government's economic measures have had a chance to take effect.

Gerard Laprise (SC-Abitibi) said the government should concentrate on making more funds available for consumption instead of worrying about production.

Ambulance Service Ready to Quit Valley

DUNCAN—The Duncan Kiwanis Ambulance Society plans to withdraw all services between the Chemainus River and Malahat unless there is "full financial involvement" by the Cowichan Valley Regional District Board.

Chairman Bill Burak said the society, which consists of four members of the local Kiwanis Club and four volunteer ambulance drivers, has been taken for granted for too long by elected officials.

For years society members have had to beg for funds to acquire new ambulances, Burak said.

He said two new ambulances will be needed within the next year. One must be replaced immediately.

Earlier the regional district agreed to help buy one ambulance if the board becomes part owner.

'ADD TO CONFUSION'

"We are not interested that a third group would become part of our organization," said Burak, "that would only add to the confusion. Now we only have one wish and that is to get out of the ambulance business.

"We have given the best possible service for the cheapest possible price for 18 years."

Compared to other ambulance centres Burak said the local society provides top bracket service.

"I feel that elected officials have not given us good co-operation and the drivers who give their time so freely to help others are becoming increasingly unhappy and frustrated because they cannot get the vehicles so badly needed."

COMPLAINTS

Since the rates per call have been boosted to keep up with the ever-increasing operating costs, Burak said drivers have been getting complaints.

In the past four years monthly expenses have spiralled from $400 to $1,000, he said.

Volunteers answer about 500 calls per year.

Regional director Ald. Margaret Robertson today praised the society for its volunteer services but said she has no idea how to solve the problem.

'GREAT DIFFICULTIES'

"I think they have carried on for many years under great difficulties and I don't think people fully realize how much these men have given."

"I am certainly with the society but I still feel that ambulance services should come under the British Columbia Hospital Insurance Services."

Mrs. Robertson said the problem will be discussed at the regional board meeting Wednesday.

Duncan Youth To Visit Japan For Scout Meet

DUNCAN — David Blasko, of Duncan, will be one of 400 boys representing Canada at the Boy Scout World Jamboree in Japan in August.

The 16-year-old assistant leader with the Second Duncan Scout Troop, who has been a Cub and Scout for the past eight years, said he is looking forward to "the wonderful opportunity to broaden my education."

The only drawback about the trip is that David, who is sponsored by several local adult leaders and the provincial Scout commissioner, has to raise $800 to pay for it.

Squatters Get Reprieve

UCLUELET (CP) — About 200 beach squatters at Pacific Rim National Park on Vancouver Island have been told by the park superintendent they will be allowed to remain until the end of the summer.

Superintendent George Trachuck said Monday that no attempt will be made this summer to clear out any shelters erected by the squatters, most of whom are transient young people.

However, he said the squatters have been told they will not be allowed to remain after September and that squatting will not be allowed at any time after that.

Ladysmith Raffle Royal Chairs

LADYSMITH — The centennial committee here is raffling off the chairs that Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip sat in while here.

Draw for the golden armed chairs, which were purchased for the royal visit on May 4, will be held July 17 in conjunction with the town's centennial celebrations.

Centennial committee member Ald. Pat O'Brien said the royal couple sat in the chairs 15 minutes while watching loggers sports.

Proceeds from the raffle will go towards the town's centennial project which is rebuilding the Ladysmith Community Hall.

NEW DEPUTY MINISTER of recreation and conservation or B.C., Lloyd Brooks, 50, takes over June 30. He is the former assistant deputy minister of mines and natural resources in Manitoba.

'IT'S THE NICEST PICTURE'

Queen Pacifies Slighted Village

CUMBERLAND — Queen Elizabeth has eased the hurt feelings of centennial committee and council members here.

They have received a letter sent by the Queen expressing regret that her visit to Cumberland was cancelled.

The cancellation had angered the community, which was informed of the decision two days after it was made.

The Queen also sent signed portraits of herself and Prince Philip.

Mayor William Moncrief said, "It's the nicest picture I've ever seen," and he asked council to allow purchase of a suitable frame.

Bathtub Entries Flowing In

NANAIMO — More than 50 entries have already been received for the "Great International" Nanaimo to Vancouver bathtub race on July 25, starting at 10 a.m.

Entries include seven U.S. contestants, including a team from U.S. Trout, a navy vessel stationed at San Diego, three from Winnipeg and two from Edmonton.

Semi-finals will again be held in Australia, with the winners flown to Nanaimo.

The Royal Nanaimo Bathing Society agreed to let the four Nanaimo representatives to the Children's International Summer Village at Waterloo, Ont., take 60 bathtub coins.

Marty Tings, Terri-Lynn Philip, Gerry Kielman and Chris Huber will use the coins as "traders" with other children from other countries at the village.

SUPREME FRIED CHICKEN

1/3 cup all purpose flour
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp paprika
1/4 tsp pepper
1 - 2 1/2 to 3 lbs. ready to cook broiler chicken cut up. Shortening for frying.

Combine flour and seasonings in paper or plastic bag; add 2 or 3 pieces of chicken at a time and shake. Place on rack to let coating dry. Heat shortening (1 1/4 inch deep in skillet) until a drop of water sizzles. Brown meaty pieces first; then add remaining pieces (be sure not to crowd). Brown one side, turn with tongs. When lightly browned, 15 to 20 minutes, reduce heat; cover tightly. If the cover is not tight, add 1 tbs. water. Cook until fork tender about 30 to 40 minutes. Uncover last 10 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Note: For extra crustiness, add 1/2 cup fine dry bread crumbs to flour for the coating.

NO PROBLEMS IN B.C., PRAIRIES, ONTARIO BUT . . .

Easterners Must Walk Carefully Near Foot 'Doctors'

Quebecers and Maritimers with foot trouble should walk cautiously for more than one reason, says Irving Kaufman, past president of the Canadian Podiatry Association.

They are living in the few places in North America where a person can sign up for a course, buy a certificate with the letters DP and a gold seal stamped on it and set himself up for life in the potentially lucrative business of treating feet.

"Quebec has the heaviest concentration of people misrepresenting themselves as foot specialists on the continent," Dr. Kaufman said. "And the government is to a great extent responsible for the situation."

Dr. A. V. N. Hilliard of the B.C. Podiatry Association said government legislation governing podiatry is in effect in Ontario and the four Western provinces.

He said this leaves Quebec and the Maritimes "wide open for both qualified and unqualified practitioners."

He said the minimum requirement for Ontario and the West is a four-year course. This qualifies the podiatrist to recognize symptoms of more general diseases — a slow healing sore that could be a sign of diabetes, for example — and refer the patient to a general doctor.

Hilliard said many U.S. states now are requiring a podiatrist to serve an internship at an accredited hospital before setting up practice. He said this trend hasn't begun in Canada yet, although Vancouver General Hospital is accredited by the American Podiatry Association as a training hospital.

Graduates of a three-year British course are considered for licensing here if they take a year of post-graduate work. One-year on correspondence courses qualify a person only to be a pedicurist.

In B.C., practitioners are screened by a five-man board made up of two doctors and three podiatrists, Dr. Hilliard explained.

B.C. Medical will pay for four visits a year to a podiatrist approved by this board.

Hilliard said at one time the B.C. Podiatry Association "went after" unlicensed practitioners, but it is not economically feasible for them to do so since the provincial medical plan began.

Kaufman said the Canadian Podiatry Association is concerned about the problem because it believes "people are entitled to have every part of their body taken care of by specialists in that discipline."

Toward that end, the association has made representations to every Quebec government seeking to have legislation introduced that would force podiatrists and so-called foot specialists to pass board examinations in the way medical doctors must before being licensed.

Government health committees always express surprise and interest in the problem, Kaufman said, but no action has ever been taken.

There is no university in Canada which offers a degree program in podiatry and, as a result, most of the country's 375 legitimate practitioners study in the United States.

Their medical training is much the same as that of a dentist, he said. Podiatrists take a minimum of two years of pre-med and then branch off for another four years of podiatry, including anatomy, physiology and chemistry.

They require at least 5,000 hours of lectures before attaining graduate status and many take further courses after receiving a degree.

They alone are entitled to call themselves doctors of podiatry.

Nestling in Quebec, however, safe from fines and board exams, are at least 250 people calling themselves DPs — but in their cases, the "P" actually stands for "practic pedics" or pedicure.

Their training period varies. One practitioner in suburban Pointe Claire told Kaufman he spent one day watching a New York City podiatrist at work before hanging out his own shingle.

Others buy a book containing seven or eight lessons, with questions at the end of each chapter. The reader is "duty-bound," Kaufman said with a smile, "not to peek at the answers in the back of the book."

Once the questionnaires are filled out, the reader is mailed a diploma. His knowledge may be further supplemented by a one-week course in intensive salesmanship, where he learns how to sell arch supports and inner soles.

A third program, which costs up to $325, turns out graduate pedicurists, who know as much about foot structure as the neighborhood manicurist does about hands.

Kaufman said Quebec "has been a thorn in the field of foot medicine for many years because of its policy of looking the other way."

"Some 50 to 65 per cent of the population will have some foot trouble some time in their lives. Feet should not hurt any more than any other part of the body, but a common complaint is fatigue."

Because fatigue and recurrent tiredness are one of nature's earliest warning signals, Kaufman said, it is important the patient not be soothed or reassured by an ill-trained amateur into thinking his condition is normal.

"They can cut off corns and generally make the patient feel better, but they rarely get at the underlying cause of pain."

However, the law of averages is with them. It is only one case in thousands where incorrect treatment eventually ends up in amputation."

He even knows of one patient who was told she would have to suffer because she had "woolly bones."

Besides harming the public, which has no reliable source of information with which to check the chosen podiatrist's credentials, Quebec's lack of regulations is affecting the careers of legitimate doctors.

Kaufman said several young Quebecers have headed to the U.S. for podiatric training and either remained there or moved to Ontario to practise. They are determined to avoid Quebec until the situation changes.

"There is nothing for them here. They are lumped in with quacks and others misrepresenting the profession and are not even permitted to operate or prescribe because they can't be licensed."

'Revolution' By Women Due

Today's young women will revolutionize the world, Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford told a ladies' night dinner Tuesday of the Victoria chapter, Administrative Management Society.

"Woman's world has undergone a real revolution since grandmother's day," she said. "Why should it not happen again and more quickly?"

In a talk entitled Women in Your Life, Mrs. Elford outlined the changes that have taken place in the role of women during the last century.

She noted that 91 years ago Emily Howard Stowe became the first Canadian woman permitted to practise medicine — 13 years after graduating from medical school. Women were permitted to vote in Canada for the first time in 1884 — in Ontario municipal elections, when only widows and spinners were eligible.

She pointed out that "running a home was more than a full-time job" in those days, and few women had time for anything else.

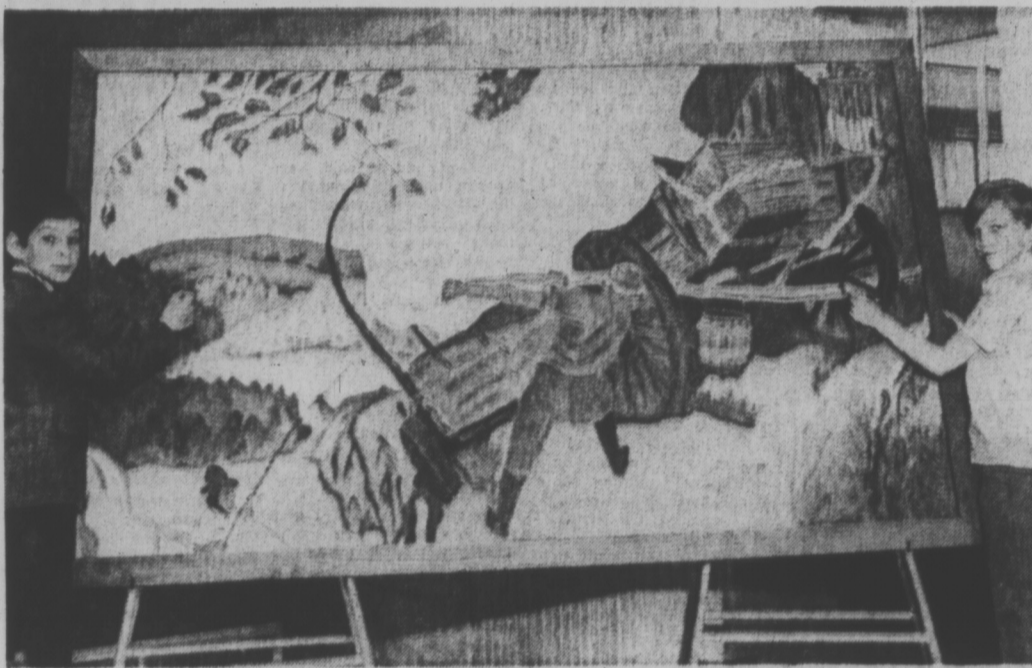

In 1917 Manitoba became the first province to extend the federal franchise to women. Since then only two women have served in the federal cabinet. Between 1920 and 1970 only 18 women have been elected to parliament, Mrs. Elford said, and today only one of the 264 members of the House of Commons is a woman.

In the judicial field, she said that since Emily Murphy became the first woman to hold judicial office in 1916, only one woman has been seated on the bench of a superior court, in Quebec in 1968.

Mrs. Elford said that in 1901 "scarcely more than one out of every seven adult women was in the labor force. Today that proportion has risen to nearly one out of three."

Young women in their teens and 20s "are . . . the real hope of the world," she told the dinner guests. "Your daughters will adapt to change far more easily than those of us who are still rather tradition-bound."

"The life style young people have adopted as being perfectly natural enables them to cope with family, home, a job and even continuing education with much greater ease than any previous generation."

Smoking Ad Burns Up Mather

OTTAWA (CP) — MP Barry Mather got fired up when he spotted smoke in the current official publication of the Canadian Olympic Association.

As a result, the New Democratic member for Surrey-White Rock in B.C. has written letters to COA headquarters in Montreal — with copies to two prominent patrons of the COA, Gov.-Gen. Roland Michener and Prime Minister Trudeau, and to Health Minister John Munro.

The current edition of the official COA publication carries a full-page advertisement for Player's cigarettes. Mather said in the letter, released Tuesday, Promotion of cigarette smoking is promotion of "cigarette disease," he said.

He protested on two grounds:

- "Cigarette smoking is detrimental to the prowess of Canada's athletes and it is dangerous to public health." A health department estimate "indicates that more than 1,100 Canadians die in each month from cigarette-induced disease including lung cancer, heart ailments and emphysema," he adds.

- The COA "receives the official recognition and support of the Canadian government whose health policies and health funds are directed particularly toward reducing the number of young people who smoke or who start smoking."

Alcoholics Must Want Help

It's useless to try to help an alcoholic who has not asked for help, Captain Bruce Harcourt of the Salvation Army told Saanich Kiwanis Club members Tuesday evening.

Harcourt spoke on the problems of alcoholism and the work being done at the army's alcoholic rehabilitation centre at 516 Yates Street.

He said that once an alcoholic admits he needs help he must have it immediately. Harcourt pointed out that although the centre had purchased more beds recently they have had to turn away men for lack of accommodation.

Harcourt said physical, mental, moral and spiritual help is given at the centre. Alcoholics are usually suffering from lack of food and exposure when they get there.

New arrivals are placed in a special care unit where they receive medication and a nourishing liquid diet until they can take solid foods.

Later the alcoholic is moved to a dormitory where he is counselled by staff members and outside professionals. A doctor is on call 24 hours a day.

Harcourt pointed out that the centre must expand to meet present needs in the area.

"There are some 5,000 alcoholics in Victoria," he said. Harcourt said money for expansion will have to come from people interested in the work of the centre.

SUPREME FRIED CHICKEN

1/3 cup all purpose flour
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp paprika
1/4 tsp pepper
1 - 2 1/2 to 3 lbs. ready to cook broiler chicken cut up. Shortening for frying.

Combine flour and seasonings in paper or plastic bag; add 2 or 3 pieces of chicken at a time and shake. Place on rack to let coating dry. Heat shortening (1/4 inch deep in skillet) until a drop of water sizzles. Brown meaty pieces first; then add remaining pieces (be sure not to crowd). Brown one side, turn with tongs. When lightly browned, 15 to 20 minutes, reduce heat; cover tightly. If the cover is not tight, add 1 tbs. water. Cook until fork tender about 30 to 40 minutes. Uncover last 10 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

Note: For extra crustiness, add 1/2 cup fine dry bread crumbs to flour for the coating.

NO PROBLEMS IN B.C., PRAIRIES, ONTARIO BUT . . .

Easterners Must Walk Carefully Near Foot 'Doctors'

Quebecers and Maritimers with foot trouble should walk cautiously for more than one reason, says Irving Kaufman, past president of the Canadian Podiatry Association.

They are living in the few places in North America where a person can sign up for a course, buy a certificate with the letters DP and a gold seal stamped on it and set himself up for life in the potentially lucrative business of treating feet.

"Quebec has the heaviest concentration of people misrepresenting themselves as foot specialists on the continent," Dr. Kaufman said. "And the government is to a great extent responsible for the situation."

Dr. A. V. N. Hilliard of the B.C. Podiatry Association said government legislation governing podiatry is in effect in Ontario and the four Western provinces.

He said this leaves Quebec and the Maritimes "wide open for both qualified and unqualified practitioners."

He said the minimum requirement for Ontario and the West is a four-year course. This qualifies the podiatrist to recognize symptoms of more general diseases — a slow healing sore that could be a sign of diabetes, for example — and refer the patient to a general doctor.

Hilliard said many U.S. states now are requiring a podiatrist to serve an internship at an accredited hospital before setting up practice. He said this trend hasn't begun in Canada yet, although Vancouver General Hospital is accredited by the American Podiatry Association as a training hospital.

Graduates of a three-year British course are considered for licensing here if they take a year of post-graduate work. One-year or correspondence courses qualify a person only to be a pedicurist.

In B.C., practitioners are screened by a five-man board made up of two doctors and three podiatrists, Dr. Hilliard explained.

B.C. Medical will pay for four visits a year to a podiatrist approved by this board.

Hilliard said at one time the B.C. Podiatry Association "went after" unlicensed practitioners, but it is not economically feasible for them to do so since the provincial medical plan began.

Kaufman said the Canadian Podiatry Association is concerned about the problem because it believes "people are entitled to have every part of their body taken care of by specialists in that discipline."

Toward that end, the association has made representations to every Quebec government seeking to have legislation introduced that would force podiatrists and so-called foot specialists to pass board examinations in the way medical doctors must before being licensed.

Government health committees always express surprise and interest in the problem, Kaufman said, but no action has ever been taken.

There is no university in Canada which offers a degree program in podiatry and, as a result, most of the country's 375 legitimate practitioners study in the United States.

Their medical training is much the same as that of a dentist, he said. Podiatrists take a minimum of two years of pre-med and then branch off for another four years of podiatry, including anatomy, physiology and chemistry.

They require at least 5,000 hours of lectures before attaining graduate status and many take further courses after receiving a degree.

They alone are entitled to call themselves doctors of podiatry.

Nestling in Quebec, however, safe from fines and board exams, are at least 250 people calling themselves DPs — but in their cases, the "P" actually stands for "practitioner" or "pedicure."

Their training period varies. One practitioner in suburban Pointe Claire told Kaufman he spent one day watching a New York City podiatrist at work before hanging out his own shingle.

Others buy a book containing seven or eight lessons, with questions at the end of each chapter. The reader is "duty-bound," Kaufman said with a smile, "not to peek at the answers in the back of the book."

Once the questionnaires are filled out, the reader is mailed a diploma. His knowledge may be further supplemented by a one-week course in intensive salesmanship, where he learns how to sell arch supports and inner soles.

A third program, which costs up to $325, turns out graduate pedicurists, who know as much about foot structure as the neighborhood manicurist does about hands.

Kaufman said Quebec "has been a thorn in the field of foot medicine for many years because of its policy of looking the other way."

"Some 50 to 65 per cent of the population will have some foot trouble some time in their lives. Feet should not hurt any more than any other part of the body, but a common complaint is fatigue."

Because fatigue and recurrent tiredness are one of nature's earliest warning signals, Kaufman said, it is important the patient not be soothed or reassured by an ill-trained amateur into thinking his condition is normal.

"They can cut off corns and generally make the patient feel better, but they rarely get at the underlying cause of pain."

However, the law of averages is with them. It is only one case in thousands where incorrect treatment eventually ends up in amputation.

He even knows of one patient who was told she would have to suffer because she had "woolly bones."

Besides harming the public, which has no reliable source of information with which to check the chosen podiatrist's credentials, Quebec's lack of regulations is affecting the careers of legitimate doctors.

Kaufman said several young Quebecers have headed to the U.S. for podiatric training and either remained there or moved to Ontario to practise. They are determined to avoid Quebec until the situation changes.

"There is nothing for them here. They are lumped in with quacks and others misrepresenting the profession and are not even permitted to operate or prescribe because they can't be licensed."

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN

Poverty Tagged as Key Canadian Problem

EDMONTON (CP) — Society's main problem is poverty, not the aged, those on welfare, youth or the native population, the National Council of Jewish Women was told Tuesday.

Reg Basken of Edmonton was addressing the council on behalf of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers' Union. "We have to consider all the basic needs, the human and social as well as the physical, in planning for guaranteed annual incomes," he told about 140 delegates and guests.

He said he believed more groups would have to alter their attitudes, especially in a society where there may not be enough jobs for everyone.

Basken was one of nine panelists at workshops held by the delegates.

The biennial meeting of the 5,000-member organization has brought together representatives of youth, aged, native and welfare groups to discuss ways volunteer organizations can best help.

Council President Sophie Draeche said volunteer organizations no longer can do things for other groups, but must work with these groups to help meet their goals.

During the panel discussion, June Robertson of Pensioners Concerned, a nation-wide organization for retired elderly persons, said groups such as the council could help by supporting her organization's plea to the federal government for increased basic tax exemptions for old-age pensioners.

The basic exemptions work against those on low incomes and many of the old-age pensioners are in this position, she said. Their savings for retirement have been affected by inflation.

"Even if you go out baby-sitting to make ends meet, you're taxed on it," she said.

Ellen Thompson, president of Humans on Welfare, an Edmonton organization that helps welfare recipients, said it is impossible, in some cases, for a family to get off welfare.

These families want their children to know something better, she said. But when they are degraded by welfare systems that force children to use vouchers rather than cash to get school books and deny them small amounts for pocket money or clothes such as others have, then the children also become discouraged and it becomes a poverty cycle.

Tony Belcourt, president of the Native Council of Canada, said he believes native peoples must help themselves, but added that groups such as the council can help by understanding, by support of native peoples' projects and with funds.

Jon Fried, chairman of Edmonton's Council of Student Union Presidents, spoke as a young person "alienated by today's society."

He said use of drugs, radical movements or opting out of society showed young people were discouraged and alienated by what they see in society today.

He urged volunteer groups to take action to right the wrongs that are turning the young people away rather than trying to cure the symptoms.

Women's Lib Cadre Disrupts Futurists Session

By MICHAEL KERNAN

WASHINGTON (WP) — "I say, if we're entering the age of chaos, we'd better learn to live with it," shouted a delegate to the World Future Society's general assembly here.

The reason he was shouting was that most of the other 1,000 delegates were shouting too. A women's liberation cadre had just taken over the morning session, entitled "Goals and Values for Mankind," demanding not only that they be given a far larger role in the proceedings, but that the word "mankind" (next to "dichotomy" the most popular word at the conference) be changed to "human-kind."

A few minutes before, just at the first speaker left the podium, Wilma Scott Heide, board chairman of the National Organization for Women (NOW), and three area chapter leaders filed up to the rostrum and stood behind moderator Joseph Coates.

Coates, a bearded bespectacled National Science Foundation official, filibustered for several minutes before turning over the mike to Mrs. Heide with a warning to the delegates that "we'd better brace ourselves for a brief interruption."

Mrs. Heide said that there was no need to brace oneself, that the interruption might not be brief, and that "anybody who doesn't take us seriously can leave now."

In desperation, Coates (or was it someone in the audience?) offered her the chair for the session. She refused. (Later she explained that her purpose was not merely to get attention, but to participate — both in the conference and in the planning of humankind's future.)

Coates, who by this time was himself getting some unkind advice from the audience, appealed for continuation of the session on the basis that each delegate had paid around $50 to hear it.

She complained that she had been given short shrift by the society, had been scheduled as a panelist instead of a speaker, and this on the one day she couldn't attend.

A grey man in the front waved his arms at her. "Madam, please stand back from the mike," he said, "you're drowning us with noise."

From then on, however, most of the noise came from the audience as the Futurists, nearly all men, left off their applause and amused smiles to begin a barrage that ranged from a quotation of Robert's Rules of Order to "F— you!" Coates himself, getting back the mike instantly got into trouble by calling the visitor "Mrs. Heide."

"That's Wilma Scott Heide," she snapped, her face turning the color of her pink flowered dress.

Coates complied, but before long the situation had deteriorated to the point that he was addressing her as "Mrs. or madam or whatever you want to call me yourself." He asked her what she wanted.

"Well, I'm not sure just what I intend to do," she replied.

About 150 stayed. Mrs. Heide did not. She went next door because "the mainstream isn't in this room; this is just a dissident group... if you want to have a in here, go ahead."

consciousness-raising session. Later she spoke as part of the session in the other room, and in the afternoon she led a seminar on women's liberation and men's emancipation.

She said she had hoped to combine that meeting with "the lib game," scheduled at the same time, but the conflict was not resolved. The game was one of those sociological charades at which nobody has much fun.

"I'd be irresponsible if I let $3,500 be washed down the drain by intruders... I won't have the democratic process overridden by any group." He told the members to "vote on what you choose to do; if not, adjourn."

A few assorted comments from the audience: "Don't filter her through the moderator; let her express herself."

"It's unreasonable of you to say you don't know what you plan to do. If that's how women will act when they get into office..."

"Let's leave. Let's vote with our feet and end this farce."

Mrs. Heide and the other women were allowed to make brief statements while the panel officials conferred behind a pillar. The statement that generated the most reaction was part of a paper read by 18-year-old Gabrielle Fackre of Auburndale, Mass., a paper not written by herself but having to do with women and futurology.

Women, she said, are grossly under-represented in the field. She traced the reason to the sexism that makes science and government careers had for women to get "because their minds aren't supposed to be analytical."

Nearly two hours after the session began, the vote was taken among delegates to move to the room next door and leave the visitors and their cause behind.

No modern inertial "windup engine" has been built but the principle was tested for 16 years starting in 1920 by the Oerlikon Co. of Switzerland. Oerlikon built a 70-passenger bus powered with the inertial or "flywheel energy storage" engine as Prof. David Rabenhorst of Johns Hopkins prefers to call it.

The bus ran fine and was delightfully quiet. The only trouble was the motor had to be rewound at every stop.

But the same principle was used successfully to drive naval torpedoes late in the 19th century.

The Johns Hopkins scientists envision a sealed engine in which the flywheel would revolve at speeds as great as 2,000 m.p.h. at its outer edge. This energy would be transmitted to the wheels and geared down — and reversed through magnetic couplings.

The engine would run on its own momentum long enough to drive the car 100 miles. Then, the motorist would stop at a gas station, where the flywheel would be wound up again in about 30 seconds by a large electric motor.

The Johns Hopkins scientists said only Ford, among the Detroit automakers, has shown an interest in the project. But the New York and San Francisco metropolitan transit authorities are studying it.

The principle is the same as that by which some toys will run for several minutes after their inertial balance wheel is given a brisk start with a small spring motor or by running the toy over the floor.

Rabenhorst said one criticism of the "wind up" engine proposal was that it simply would transfer air pollution from vehicles to the power stations that would be needed at the rewind stations.

But he said it actually is a lot easier to control concentrated gas emissions from power stations than the emissions from millions of automobiles.

The "windup motor" principle also could be used in lawn mowers and many kinds of power tools, the scientists believe.

Pollution Solution: Windup Auto Engine

By LEROY POPE

NEW YORK (UPI) — A "windup" motor that works like a child's toy is the newest entry in the race for the pollution-free auto engine of the future.

Scientists at Johns Hopkins University's applied physics laboratory, Silver Spring, Md., have asked the U.S. government for a grant to develop such an engine.

They see it as a rival to the Wankel rotary combustion engine, various Rankine cycle vapor engines and electric powered cars as a way to end pollution of the air from vehicles.

No modern inertial "windup engine" has been built but the principle was tested for 16 years starting in 1920 by the Oerlikon Co. of Switzerland. Fewer Blacks Seek Family Planning Aid

NEW YORK (UPI) — Black women are making up an increasingly small percentage of new patients seeking family planning help from Planned Parenthood, according to the head of the non-profit service group.

Dr. Alan F. Guttmacher, president of the organization, said in its annual report more than 413,000 applicants for contraceptives were helped by Planned Parenthood's 189 affiliates in 1970 — a 20 per cent increase over 1969.

Guttmacher said there were more white and teen-aged patients and fewer blacks.

"Around 20 per cent of our new patients last year were black Americans compared with 47 per cent in 1965," he said. "White patients have risen from 40 per cent of new patients in 1965 to about 60 per cent in 1970."

"Despite increased services, far too many medically indigent women of childbearing age — four out of five — remain without contraceptive help," he said. "Upward of 700,000 unwanted children are born each year, about half to teen-age parents."

Guttmacher said the pill still was popular as a means of contraception, and Planned Parenthood had expanded its services to include abortions and male and female voluntary sterilization.

Brush Not Answer

TORONTO (CP) — A United States dentist says brushing teeth makes them look and feel better but doesn't prevent decay.

Dr. Robert F. Barkley of

Macomb, Ill., told the Ontario Dental Association's annual meeting that the best method to prevent decay is to clean teeth with dental floss and dental sticks to break up sticky masses of bacteria called plaque.

Dr. Barkley said he teaches patients to use the floss — thin nylon string that can be worked between the teeth to scrape off plaque — and the stick-like dental tools to clean their gums "while they watch TV news in the morning."

He said tooth brushes should not be thrown out, however, because they do keep the surface of the teeth clean.

DEAR ABBY...

Wants to Sleep

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
DEAR ABBY: In all the years I've been reading your column I never have seen this problem discussed:

My children are grown and out of the nest. Two are married and one is away at school. My husband prefers to have his breakfast downtown, so after 24 years of getting up early to prepare breakfast for my family, I am finally able to sleep in the morning.

Now the problem: My friends start calling me at 8:30 a.m. They have nothing to say that could not have waited until noon. They just want to visit.

Once I am awakened, I can't go back to sleep. Also they ask, "Did I wake you up?" When I say yes, they make me feel as though I should apologize for sleeping. (Especially my sister-in-law!) I have been a faithful wife and a good mother, and I am not lazy, so if I want to sleep late, whose business is it but my own?

I would take the telephone off the hook but with aging parents and children-away at school I am afraid I might miss an emergency call. Is there a solution? Buckeye Dingaling.

DEAR DING: Yes! Ask each and every early bird caller to please refrain from calling you until noon because you have now earned the right to sleep late and would like to enjoy it. If they "forget," hang up on them. They will soon learn to respect your wishes. (P.S. For openers, clip this, and send it to the worst offender.)

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of the following? A new neighbor invited me and two other neighbor women in for tea. When she telephoned me she said, "Please come for a cup of tea on Friday at 2 p.m. for an hour." (The other women said they had been invited in exactly the same way.)

I arrived promptly at 2 p.m. and the other neighbors were right behind me. We were given a "tour" through the new neighbor's home, after which she served us tea and little cakes. We were visiting and joking and having a lovely time, when all of a sudden an alarm clock went off in the kitchen. Our hostess jumped up and said, "Well, our hour is up! Thank you for coming." Then she handed us our purses and ushered us to the door. Naturally we all left. What do you make of this? Flabbergasted.

DEAR FLABBERGASTED: I think she's one woman who says exactly what she means, and means exactly what she says.

DEAR ABBY: My husband wear a tuxedo. He said he our son's wedding. His reason is that the reception is being held in a "basement." True, it is basement level, but it is

Lines Around The Mouth

The mouth area comes in for so much attention, the quicker the lines, are smoothed out and made to disappear, the younger you will look. A lotion-like substance 2nd Debut applied nightly will make the lines fill in and the skin become smooth once more. You will probably use 2nd Debut on your entire face to banish dryness, but do use a little extra care around your mouth. After applying the 2nd Debut massage very lightly, until it disappears into your skin. Your drug or dept. store has 2nd Debut with CEF 600 or CEF 1200 in double strength and you'll find it a genuine delight to use.

Tots' Dental Plan Supported

TORONTO (CP) — The Ontario Dental Association is in full accord with provincial plans to provide dental insurance for children, says the association's secretary-treasurer.

Dr. Kenneth Pownall, in an interview Tuesday at the association's annual meeting, said the dentists suggested the coverage begin with three-year-olds, but beginning at any age up to six would be suitable.

Dr. Pownall, also registrar of the Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario, said there are enough dentists in Ontario to come with the plan if it begins this fall as Health Minister A. B. R. Lawrence has hinted.

He said Ontario has more than 3,000 dentists and is adding 200 a year, including an influx from Quebec.

Action Focus Of Cub Rally

A commando course, pole-climbing, swinging on ropes from trees were all part of a cub rally held by the Tsartlip district in Saanich's Centennial Park.

The rally was patterned on a recent one attended by Cubs of the Douglas and Juan de Fuca districts.

He has received more than 50 applications from Quebec dentists in recent months seeking the right to practise in Ontario. The reason given by most was that they did not like the political-social climate in Quebec, he said, and education of their children was another area of concern.

Ottawa Faces Challenge on Women's Eligibility for Juries

By ELIZABETH FORBES

Question raised in the Senate back in February by Senator Theresa Casgrain, on the ineligibility of Quebec and Newfoundland women for jury duty, resulted in continuing debate from then until early this month and saw a challenge issued that was so well supported that the federal government may be forced to take a position on the issue.

The challenge came from Senator Muriel Fergusson, who reminded her colleagues that recommendation 142 of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women urges that women in Canada should be liable for jury duty on the same terms as men.

"Acting as a juror is not only a citizen's duty but it is a citizen's privilege, although often it is not fully appreciated," the senator said.

ONLY 1921

She then pointed out that in Britain women were able to serve on juries as long ago as 1919 and in New Zealand in 1942. The first province of Canada to pass a law to make women eligible for jury service was Alberta in 1921.

Since then laws have been passed which permit women to serve on juries in the Territories and in all the provinces except Newfoundland and Quebec.

She said, "Although it is relatively recently that women have been called to serve on juries on Nova Scotia, the laws of that province did not really prohibit women from serving."

In 1951, after this was discovered a bill was introduced in the Nova Scotia legislature which would have limited jury service to men, but the women of that province protested so vehemently the bill was hastily withdrawn.

NOT REQUIRED

Today it is only in British Columbia, Nova Scotia and the Territories that women serve under the same conditions as men.

In most provinces they are not required to serve unless they have shown a willingness to do so, the senator said, then added, "Personally I would like to see no distinction between the liability of men and women for this service."

"There are cases when men may be exempted from jury service because of hardship. The same grounds of ill health, special obligations, or other hardship, which would enable men to claim exemption, should apply to women."

"Women should not be disqualified by law, but while being qualified they should be entitled to exemption in certain circumstances."

REPEAT ASKED

One question asked whether the section of the Criminal Code concerned could be repealed by Parliament to remove reference to provincial legislation where qualifications of jurors are concerned and the other whether parliament could make provision for the eligibility of women for jury service throughout Canada in criminal matters.

When debate resumed a week later Hon. Paul Martin informed the Senate "the position of Senator Fergusson is valid."

He had consulted law officers of the Crown regarding the first question and in their opinion "Parliament could repeal the section 534 (1) and legislate in relation to the qualifications of jurors without reference to provincial legislation."

ON AGENDA

As to the second question, Martin said that while "this is, of course, a matter of policy for the Government, with which I am not in a position at this moment to deal", it had been indicated to him by the secretary of the conference of commissioners on uniformity of legislation in Canada that "he would see to it that this question is put on the agenda for this year's meeting of the criminal section of the conference."

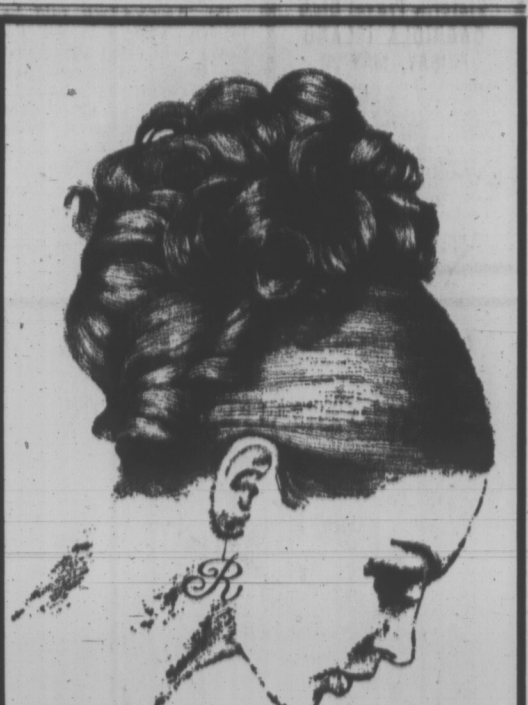

Concluding the debate early this month, Mrs. Casgrain pointed out it had just been announced that in Quebec the legislation will be amended so as to allow women to serve on juries. It was also noted earlier in the debate that in the Throne Speech in the Newfoundland legislature in late March, there was a proposal to give women the right to sit on juries.

NEW CAMPSITES

About 600 provincial park workers are busy building new campsites, picnic shelters and toilet facilities in parks under a $15 million special fund for parks development.

Another 400 persons will be hired by June 15 when the program hits full swing, a parks branch spokesman said.

Most of the 1,000 specially hired workers will be students, according to a pledge made during the legislative session by the government during debate on the $15 million program under the accelerated parks development act.

Lie, Loan, Larceny Mob Says No

GA's program for gamblers, organized along the lines of Alcoholics Anonymous, is based on self-help and group therapy. The GA program stresses over and over that "gambling is a sickness that can never be cured, only arrested."

The compulsive gambler is expected to follow GA rules and attend meetings regularly for the rest of his life.

GA attracts most members by ads placed by the group in either a local paper or on a local radio station.

Once admitted to the group, the new member is urged never to make another bet. No friendly card games. Not even a raffle ticket or bingo. At the meetings, new and old members stand up and give "confessionals" about their gambling exploits.

All must start by admitting to themselves and the group that they are powerless concerning gambling.

"I am a compulsive gambler," each member states as he begins his therapy.

The stores are mostly the same. Years of lying, cheating, and stealing to support their habits. The Three Ls of gambling, "Lies, Loans and Larceny," are heard again and again.

Many have had brushes with the law. Almost all, at one time or another, have lost jobs, friends or family, as a result of what one member called "the cancer that eats us up."

What causes a man to gamble compulsively?

The late Dr. Edmund

Bergler called it "psychic masochism."

Dr. Bergler, author of the "Psychology of Gambling," wrote: "Compulsive gamblers, through being denied something essential in their childhood, come to find perverse pleasure in self-punishment."

Compulsive gambling generally starts young.

"I started with marbles at five years old and quickly moved up to pinball machines, cards, sports, you name it," said Bernie P. "I even bet on a roach race once."

GA says it helps at least 25 to 30 per cent of those who join.

What about compulsive gamblers who are winners? Marvin Z. was asked.

"Show me a winner and I'll show you a liar," he answered.

MERCURY VICTIM MARKS BIRTHDAY

ALAMOGORDO, N.M. (AP) — Amos Huckelby celebrates his 15th birthday today but the lad, stricken by mercury poisoning in 1969, won't be able to see the young friends his mother has invited to the party.

After 17 months in hospitals and the state rehabilitation centre at Roswell, Amos is learning to walk again and his speech is returning. But he is still blind.

The mercury poisoning came from pork from a home-butchered hog which had been fed seed grain treated with a mercury compound fungicide.

Amos and two sisters, Dorothy Jean and Ernestine, were virtually paralysed. A brother born to their mother three months after the contaminated pork was eaten, Michael, is blind.

Dorothy Jean, now 21, has made substantial recovery and is planning to enter college. Ernestine, now 10, is still in hospital.

"I walk him quite a bit," Mrs. Huckelby said of Amos Tuesday.

"He has his exercises and other things to do. He's so glad to be home."

"We're having some of his old friends over for the birthday."

Radicals Discounted

MONTREAL (CP) — David Leighton, past president of the Canadian Consumer Council, said Tuesday business should beware of demands made by consumers' groups who usually do not represent the views of the population.

He told delegates to the spring meeting of the American Petroleum Institute's marketing division that while some consumer groups have raised important criticisms of business, others are directed by people who want to overthrow capitalism.

"Some consumer activities are interested in making the system work," he said, "but many are against the system and favor central ownership and management of the economy."

Leighton, now a director of the Banff School of Fine Arts, said consumer action groups in the last 10 years "have featured a partnership of a handful of activists — some positive and some not — with a large mass of consumers."

"Surveys have shown that most consumers are not violently disturbed about their rights as consumers."

A parallel could be drawn, he said, with the early civil rights movement in the U.S. where a "small, hard core of activists" activated a large mass of people.

Row Housing Only Meets Need

By ROGER STONERANSK

The need for housing in Greater Victoria and in British Columbia is among persons earning between $6,000 and $10,000 a year, a meeting on current housing issues was told Tuesday night.

Chris Dowling, local manager of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, said "we are finding no single-family units up for sale in this (income) range."

He also referred to the federal government's announced $100 million injection for low-income housing, aimed at persons earning between $4,000 and $6,000 a year.

His comment was one of a number made by 40 persons who toured seven local housing projects and then met in Saanich municipal hall to discuss the subject.

The tour and meeting, organized by the Victoria Home Builders' Association and Saanich, was attended by five of the nine Saanich council members, municipal officials and local builders, developers and real estate men.

Some of the points made in the discussion included:

- There is a demand for houses under $20,000 such as two seen on the tour;

- Lots in sewerage areas are costing $8,000 to $10,000, making it impossible to build houses under $20,000;

- The city of Hamilton has a land assembly scheme selling lots at $4,000 each, forcing private owners to match this low price to stay in business;

- Combining blocks into "super blocks" and giving unused road allowances and intervening streets to the development;

- Thirty to 35 per cent of some subdivisions are devoted to streets;

- Cutting lot sizes in half would cut lot prices in half;

- Higher densities will not be accepted by residents in single-family house area — to which the reply was, it's not how many units but how they are designed;

- Flexibility in such restrictions as the height of fences and setbacks;

- The high cost of interest rates.

Mayor Hugh Curtis referred to the frequent attitude of residents at public hearings, saying "to hell with you Jack and we don't want your style in our neighborhood."

He also referred to the "waste of land" in front yards, an area affording no privacy. "You just cross it to get to the house."

Assistant municipal planner Gil Laurensen said the immediate reaction to high land cost is always the same — increase the density.

It would be far better, he said, if new housing forms are introduced and spread generally throughout the municipality.

"The only result of trying to force higher densities into neighborhoods is to bring about sociological and servicing problems," he said.

The group toured seven housing projects — Cedarwood Townhouses on McKenzie, Cedar Village on North Dairy Road, Lansdowne Villa just off Cedar Hill Road near Hillside, the Victorian on Spring, Village Grove behind View Royal fire hall, Scotia Green on Scotia Street and row housing on Swan Street.

Of the family accommodation, the seven units of row housing on Swan Street offered 1,200 square feet per unit at a price of $16,900 with $850 down and $131 a month for principal, interest and tax. There were three bedrooms on two floors. A person with an income of just over $5,000 a year would qualify.

Cedarwood Townhouses, in the 1700-block McKenzie, were completed 18 months ago. Eighteen units with over 1,200 square feet each were sold for $21,800 with $1,500 down and $208 monthly payments. Three bedrooms on two floors were offered and annual income necessary to purchase was $8,000.

Cedar Village: Twenty-four units with 1,500 square feet plus 300 square feet of storage, costing $25,950 or $2,950 down and $217 a month. All but three of the units have been sold.

Developer Gordon Denford commented that the true market for such construction is in the $17,000 to $21,000 price range.

"Anyone contemplating around $24,000 will find a slow market," he said.

Lansdowne Villa: Limited dividend rental project.

Available for those earning under $5,080. If $7,200 a year, they must leave. Two bedrooms with 810 square feet rent for $127 a month.

The Victorian: Limited dividend rental project. Four one-bedroom units rent for $106 a month if income is less than $4,300 a year. Twelve two-bedroom suites rent for $127 if income is less than $5,080.

Builder Frank Krieger said this apartment building was fully rented in three days. "I had 60 applications. There is a need for this kind of accommodation," he said.

Village Grove: Row housing with single-family house appearance, achieved by breaking the usual solid front line. Enhanced by beautiful natural setting overlooking Portage Inlet, this project — now under way — drew the most comments from those making the tour.

It will comprise 38 units, six of them one-bedroom and the rest two bedrooms. Prices are between $17,200 to $19,800. Downpayment was given by builder Bruce Cooke as $2,500 with monthly payments of $152 in principal, interest and tax. With just under 1,000 square feet, units could be bought by those earning about $8,000 a year.

Scotia Green: Final phase of Saanich family housing project for low-income persons. Officially opened in January and comprising five quadruplexes with three bedrooms each. Purchased and operated by B.C. Housing Management Commission.

Hannes Kaestner

ORGAN RECITAL SET

Hannes Kaestner, an organist intimately connected with Bach's famous old church of St. Thomas in Leipzig, will give a recital in Christ Church Cathedral Friday at 8 p.m.

After being a choirster for eight years and an organ pupil of the St. Thomas cantor, his brilliance won him the position of organist in 1951 at the age of 21.

As Thomas organist and harpsichordist to the Gewandhaus-Bach Orchestra, he has toured 28 countries in Europe, Asia, Africa and South America.

In 1969 Kaestner toured the United States and Canada and was featured recitalist during the Diamond Jubilee Convention of the Royal Canadian College of Organists held in Vancouver that year.

The program Kaestner will perform includes works by Bach, Buxtehude, Samuel Scheidt and Max Reger.

Tickets are available at the cathedral office or at the door on Friday.

Concert In Square

A free open air concert in Centennial Square will be given by the Concertones, Choir of Kirkland, Wash., Friday, at 1:30 p.m.

The choir is the top-ranking musical aggregation of Lake Washington High and has won many honors. It consists of 16 boys and 34 girls under its organizer and conductor, Jack Kunz.

Among numbers they will sing Friday are the spirituals, "Oh, Lenuel and Didn't my Lord Deliver Daniel and the popular ballads, "I Found Love, All About the Blues and Stars and Shadows.

Alien Prisoners Hunger-Strike In Rome Jail

ROME (AP) — Forty foreigners held in Rome's Rebibbia prison continued a hunger strike for the third day today to protest Italy's strict law against drug users, police methods and their long imprisonment while awaiting trial.

The same prisoners won a transfer to the modern Rebibbia prison three months ago after a similar hunger strike protesting crowded cells and lack of comforts.

Most are youths caught smoking hashish or possessing a small amount of it. They have been in jail six to eight months awaiting trial. Under Italian law, drug users and peddlars face the same maximum penalty of three years in jail.

The Canadian consulate confirmed that a Canadian, Eric Peter Onasik of Toronto, is in a Rome jail awaiting trial on possession of drugs after being arrested about seven months ago.

It was not known whether Onasik was in Rebibbia prison or was one of the hunger strikers since prison officials did not disclose any names.

It is not unusual for persons arrested on drug charges to be held many months awaiting trial on the crowded Rome docket.

Many were caught by policemen posing as hippies. Police in disguise make friends with young foreigners and ask them for hashish. If the youths hand over the drug, they are arrested and charged with possessing and selling narcotics.

OLD-STYLE WESTERN GONE

TORONTO (CP) — The old-style western in which the good guy rides off into the sunset with the heroine is a thing of the past.

That's the observation of Ontario censor O. J. Silverthorn whose annual report was released Monday.

"The old-style cowboy picture is no longer with us," he said.

"Today's western imports depict scenes of wholesale slaughter, torture and slow dying."

"Bleeding and battered bodies are through the air in slow motion before being hit; innocents are massacred at close range and scenes of savagery are photographed in gory close-ups."

Mr. Silverthorn described European-made westerns as "particularly offensive."

Th last year has seen an "unfortunate" rise in violence on movie screens, and "many movies of this type are devoid of any artistic merit."

It was "heartening to see so many old film classics enjoying a successful revival." generation is discovering well-made productions free from amot and needless profanity."

Acting Career Pure Accident

By WILLIAM GLOVER
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Ernestine Jane Geraldine Russell makes a slight torso adjustment with feline languor and allows a sample of basic heavy-lidded sultriness to float across the table.

That renowned film career and this first visit to Broadway are the topics.

"I'm impulsive but pliable," she says. The comment almost purrs.

"The whole show business thing was really an accident," says the lady who came June 21 passes the half-century mark, looking as shapely as in 1940 when she erupted with explosive distinction upon Hollywood, a billboard idol three years before her initial film The Outlaw was released.

"The only subjects at school in which I was any good were art, drama and music," she says. "Well, my mother was an actress, so to rebel from the start, I decided on being a designer."

The school I went to on a Friday with my tuition cheque told me to come back Monday. During the weekend I went to see a friend who was studying drama, decided

Purrs 1940 Idol

I'd do that instead and gave them the money on Monday."

Her advent now upon Broadway in the established musical company was similarly "weird." Miss Russell is not a musical comedy enthusiast—"The absence of a good story bores me"—but on a night off during a stock production in New Jersey, she went to see the prize-winning production and visited backstage afterwards.

She learned that leading lady Elaine Stritch was to head a national tour. Somebody from management suggested Miss Russell might be interested. That was several months ago and this week she sleekly-poised star took over as a rich, thrice-married sophisticate in the caustic musical about big city wedlock.

"When I was married myself and the children were growing up I always felt the worst thing that could happen would be to get into a long-run show," Miss Russell explains of her belated Broadway arrival. "Now it doesn't matter where I live."

In 1968 she was divorced from former football star Bob Waterfield, ending after 25 years one of the highly-publicized romances of the cinema era. Her second husband, Roger Barrett, died a few months after they were married.

Of her three adopted children, Thomas, 20, is in the National Guard; Tracy, 19, is a college student, and Buck, 15, lives with Waterfield. Although thus freed of most domestic duties, homebody Russell's switch to New York has been immeasurably cheered by finding a big apartment she can decorate.

"When I was a little girl, I had scrapbooks filled with house pictures—the doll bit meant nothing. I would like to have been an architect but I wouldn't have the patience to make all those drawings."

She does read blueprints, though, and is involved with two of her brothers, who are in the construction business, in an 80 unit apartment development back in the San Fernando Valley.

Her other avocational involvement is WAIF, a private agency which she was instrumental in founding 15 years ago and which has helped place 25,000 children for adoption in the U.S. and abroad.

She dismisses television with an eloquent shrug—"you have to work too hard." Stock theatre engagements are better—"I enjoy the actual performance but it's the time between that is so empty."

Tulip's Seedpod Must Be Removed

By HILDA BEASTALL

A quick round of the flower beds made in the next two weeks will reveal nearly all tulips have finished flowering. Unlike daffodils and other narcissi, tulip flowers do not wither on the stem and remain there, drawing the gardener's attention by their attention by their browned appearance.

Tulip petals drop as they fade, leaving just the bare green stem. But what of the knob on top of the stem?

This is the most important part to be removed, since the knob is a seedpod containing hundreds of seeds. The bulb will endeavor to ripen these seeds before the leaves die down, and will draw on all the reserves in the below-ground tulip bulb if necessary to accomplish this.

Take a paper bag or a pail with you. Snap off the seedpods; if you get the old petals so much the better. A good gardener makes the rounds before petals fall, since every tulip petal on the soil is a fungus hazard.

A feeding of the same fertilizer as for daffodils may be given if well watered in at soil level.

If you come across any strange colored or distorted leaves the complete bulb with all the soil attached to its roots must be put into a paper bag for burning. These are signs of tulip fire disease, which occasionally will occur in a garden.

A wet flowering season, followed by strong winds will spread the disease across beds, borders, or field rows. Colchicum leaves must be left growing for another two weeks or so like those of tulips and narcissi.

You will recall the dainty pinky mauve goblets which came through the soil last August and September, bare of leaves. The leaves we see now belong to the colchicum bulbs. Not until late winter did they appear; now they measure 14 by three inches.

Some gardeners mistake them for tulip leaves, believing they are getting all leaves and no flowers.

The heavy midrib and a tendency to develop longitudinal pleating or ridging—these are features of colchicum leaves. Also their color has been dark rich green, while tulip leaves are grey. Now that maturity is beginning, the green of the colchicum becomes lighter.

Quite suddenly it seems, the leaves will become limp and at pale thin green. When that happens, they may be cut off at ground level. Their service of enriching the bulbs is finished. Do not pull off the leaves, for this would damage the bulb tissue.

Leaves are as important to bulbs as to trees, shrubs or vegetables. We must protect them while they fulfill their natural functions, that of replenishing the bulbs to produce the flowers which bring us delight.

WATER OVERDOSE KILLS BOOZER

MEXICO CITY (UPI)—A 48-year-old man who had been on a two-week drinking binge died from an overdose of water, police said.

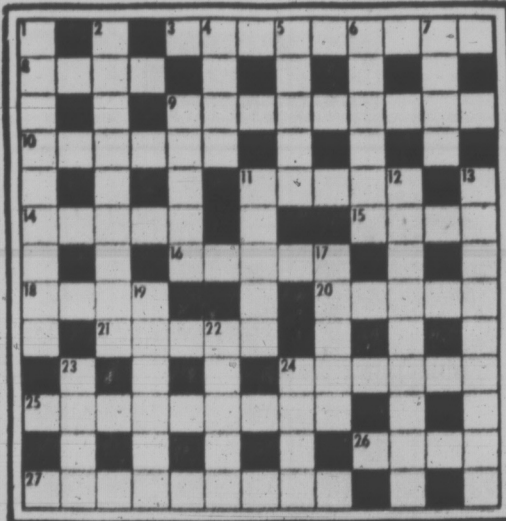

Mrs. Marta Vega Perez told police Raimundo Salazar Loredo, a friend, arrived at her house complaining of a terrible thirst. She said he told her he had been drinking for two weeks.

She said he drank a great quantity of water and laid down to sleep but suddenly had trouble breathing and died before she could summon aid.

SOLUTION THURSDAY

KARPIN ON BRIDGE

By FRED KARPIN

In a divorce case, a woman stated in court that her reason for wanting a divorce was because her husband couldn't play bridge. "That is ridiculous," the judge interrupted. "How can you ask for a divorce for such a reason? You should be happy that he doesn't play cards."

"You don't understand, your Honor," replied the woman. "He can't play bridge—but he does every day."

What the woman meant, of course, was that her husband had no technical ability, but nevertheless was a true devotee of the game. He might, for example, have been the South declarer in today's deal. Neither side vulnerable. South deals.

South's rebid of one no-trump was a poor call. This type of rebid denotes a minimum hand—and South, with 17 high-card points, had a hand that was well above minimum. His better rebid would have been two clubs. However, over North's two spade bid South recovered by jumping to three no-trump. On West's opening heart

Tom was checking a heap of coins on the table when Ron came in. "Let's have some of those, Dad," exclaimed the boy. "I've got a chance to buy Ted's bike for fifteen bucks." "It's not that much," Tom told him. "All dimes and quarters. If the quarters were pennies and the dimes dollars there'd be three times as much here." How much was there?

NAM NGUM, Laos (WP)—The massive Nam Ngum Dam and hydro-electric project is within a few months of completion, but there are predictions that it may benefit the Pathet Lao Communists as much as anyone.

It is already clear that the hard-pressed Laotian peasantry in the area will receive no direct benefit.

Electricity generated here will go to Vientiane and Thailand. There is no provision for making the dam's reservoir water available for irrigation. In fact, the lake created by the dam is likely to be a smelly cesspool for several years, the project manager for the dam's Japanese consulting engineering firm said, because of faulty Laotian conservation measures.

Peasants behind the dam and on the frontage of the future lake have already lost their land, and it is reliably reported that Vientiane generals are still bickering over distribution among themselves.

"You don't explain long-term development problems to peasants," said a long-time British resident of Laos, firmly pro-Pathet Lao and anti-Pathet Lao. "The Pathet Lao will gain from the obvious omissions of the dam. All they have to do is point at it."

Nam Ngum is, according to official information at the site, "one of the hydro-power schemes under the Mekong River Comprehensive Development Program, usually called the Mekong Committee.

Long-range development of the Mekong basin is the goal of the committee. Thailand and South Vietnam have received hydro-electric projects under the plan already, and others are being built in Laos and Cambodia.

The Nam Ngum project sits at the division between the southern edge of the Laotian mountains and the northern edge of the Vientiane Plain. To the north is the source of water; to the south an absolute need for water.

Nam Ngum is to produce power for the capital area, 50 miles south, and for Thailand's underdeveloped and politically volatile northern provinces. It will provide nothing locally.

Though underpopulated in comparison to most areas of Asia, the Vientiane Plain is the most heavily populated section of Laos. With water, the land could support many more much better, and the local peasants realize this.

Speculation and controversy over the dam's construction and use began with the feasibility studies nearly a decade ago and continue today.

"Most everyone but the right people are getting something from Nam Ngum, and not the way it was intended," the Britisher said.

"The Pathet Lao receives a propaganda windfall, the Japanese builders a long-range alteration project, the generals a land grab and the Thais a dam."

"For Laos' peasantry who gave everything, there is nothing in return — only much less than they had. The Pathet Lao is waiting."

Soon Japanese technicians will seal off a tunnel diverting river water around the dam and 230 square miles of reservoir will fill. In November electricity is scheduled to flow from the first generator. From summit to base, the dam is 767 feet, nine feet shorter than Hoover Dam in the United States. It is 1,541 feet from wing to wing.

The $28 million cost of the dam was provided by nine Western nations, including Japan and the United States. Thailand contributed cement on credit against future delivery of electricity.

Pylons and wires to carry the power south already stand on the vast, arid Vientiane Plain.

According to Teruo Yoshimatsu, project manager and engineer for Nippon Koei, the dam's consulting engineers, there are no funds to electrify the local area nor the route along the line.

Propaganda for Pathet Lao

And Land Grab for Generals

Massive Dam Benefits Everyone But Needy

Yoshimatsu notes that there is no provision for irrigation water from the reservoir though there are plans, but no funds, for an irrigation dam on the Nam Lik river, a few miles away.

There are also fears that the peasants may lose use of the Nam Ngum river itself for a few years.

Vientiane was warned six years ago to clear the dense vegetation in the reservoir bed, the Britisher said. "Nothing has been done. Now it is too late."

Within weeks of the tunnel's closing, the submerged vegetation will begin decaying and befoul the water. At best it will be a cesspool for at least three years, according to Yoshimatsu.

The pollution should not interfere with electricity production, but "will smell very bad," he said, and the Nam Ngum will carry the stench south to the Mekong with only partial dilution en route.

HOOF IT TO WORK

NEW YORK (AP) — Trunk to tail, 19 elephants plodded through the Lincoln Tunnel Monday night with the Blagling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey Circus, paying 30 cents toll for each one.

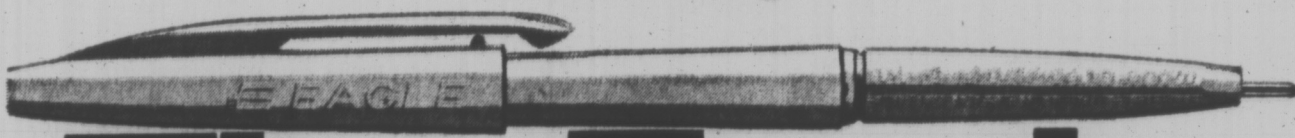

They had been stranded in South Kern, N.J., by the rail strike but hoofed the 14 miles to Madison Square Garden at about six miles an hour.

Take Off Fat With Home Recipe Plan

It's simple how quickly one may lose pounds of unsightly fat right in your own home. Make this home recipe yourself. It's easy, no trouble at all and costs little. Just go to your drugstore and ask for Naran. Pour this into a pint bottle and add enough grapefruit juice to fill the bottle. Take two tablespoonfuls twice a day as needed and follow the Naran Reducing Plan. If your first purchase does not show you a simple easy way to lose bulky fat and help regain slender more graceful curves; if excessive pounds and inches of excess fat don't disappear from neck, chin, arms, abdomen, hips, calves and ankles just return the empty bottle for your money back. Follow this easy way endorsed by many who have tried this plan and help bring back alluring curves and graceful slenderness. Note how quickly bloated disappears—how much better you feel. More alive, youthful appearing and active.

All 19¢ pens are no longer created equal.

Introducing

The Eagle

From Eagle/North-Rite. And with our reputation for quality products, there's no way we'd bring out an ordinary pen. Not even for 19¢.

If you've written with 19¢ pens before, good. Now try the Eagle. It's so smooth, it virtually glides on paper. More good news: it writes up to 50% longer than its best-known 19¢ competitor. By test. And down to the last bit of ink, it won't skip or blob. We put our most expensive ink in the Eagle. It's non-drip and ultra-smooth flowing. Because we didn't skimp, the Eagle performs like an expensive pen — instantly. What's more, we hand-test every Eagle pen to make sure its performance is perfect.

Most 19¢ pens look simply like sticks that write. We wouldn't settle for that kind of styling. The Eagle has a solid-fitting cap with a secure lock-grip. There's a textured comfort-grip to help you write your best, plus a dependable clip that holds the Eagle securely in your pocket. Colors? Rich, clear shades of blue, red, green and black. Buy an Eagle and you'll use it proudly everywhere. Eagle/North-Rite thinks you're entitled to a superior pen. Even for 19¢.

There are 4 new Eagle pens. Try your hand at them all.

WASHINGTON (WP)

The U.S. Atomic Energy Commission's five-megaton weapons test this fall will be its last on Alaska's Amchitka Island, suggesting that the "Cannikin" test is the only underground weapons test the United States plans in the multi-megaton range.

"After the successful completion of Cannikin the AEC intends to vacate Amchitka," the AEC says in the draft of a 40-page environmental statement to the White House. "Beyond successful completion of Cannikin, the AEC does not have any plans for future underground nuclear testing on Amchitka, although this does not preclude such plans should a future need arise."

ONLY ONE

Scheduled for the first week of October, Cannikin is understood to be a test of an enlarged version of the warhead for the Spartan ABM missile. The fact that the AEC plans only one such test raises several questions about future testing plans and the size of Spartan warheads.

Cannikin is being conducted in Alaska because Amchitka is the only place the AEC feels it can safely detonate weapons as large as five megatons. Its regular testing grounds in Nevada are too close to Reno, Las Vegas and Salt Lake City to test weapons larger than one or two megatons.

ALL IT NEEDS

"It's possible the AEC plans to escalate the Nevada tests from one to two megatons," one source close to the AEC said. "On the other hand, it might simply mean that the AEC feels it can get everything it needs out of one megaton test."

It could also mean that the AEC feels it can no longer afford the "luxury" of the Amchitka test site. Cannikin will be the third nuclear test (the others were Long Shot and Milrow) on Amchitka, and while the AEC will not break down the costs of the three shots, it admits it will have spent $190 million on the island by the time it cleans up after the Cannikin test.

KILL WILDLIFE

In the drafted version of its environmental report, the AEC denies Cannikin will trigger large secondary earthquakes or submarine tidal waves but does admit that it will damage the 42-mile-long island and possibly kill off some of its wildlife.

The most controversial part of the environmental statement is sure to be the AEC's discussion of how much radiation will leak from the test site into the ocean, and when this leakage will take place.

Most likely, the AEC claims, ground water contaminated by radiation will take 1,000 years to find its way into the Bering Sea, by which time the radioactivity will have been largely dissipated.

RADIATED WATER

A second and "less probable" mechanism, the AEC says, will release the radiated water to the sea in 100 years, and a third mechanism, which the AEC says is "very unlikely," will discharge contaminated water into the sea three years after the test.

If this takes place, the AEC concedes, radiated water will be discharged from the test site into the ocean for the next 130 years. The water would be 1,200 times more radioactive at the time of its first discharge than water containing the maximum safe concentrations of radiation.

The worst damage Cannikin will do to Amchitka, the AEC said, will be to leave a "subsidence crater" above the explosion site that is 10 to 100 feet deep and as much as 4,000 feet across.

TRUDEAUS MEET, KISS AT RECEPTION

'Pierre, This is Margaret!'

By JOHN MIKA

MOSCOW — Prime Minister Trudeau shook hands with his wife Margaret when they unexpectedly met in a receiving line between functions inside the Kremlin Tuesday — and then he leaned over and kissed her.

It was a welcome bit of reassurance for his bride who had her baptism of state duties at three engagements in the afternoon and evening. Throughout each event she carried on the great tradition of Canada's prime ministerial wives — tense but trying hard.

MIDI STYLE

In a beige midi dress, she went to the Kremlin for a 1½-hour luncheon thrown by Soviet Prime Minister Alexei Kosygin for the Trudeaus and team of Canadian officials involved in the first session of talks between the two leaders that morning.

She was introduced, along with the other Canadian VIPs, to the host's array of luminaries at a pre-luncheon reception. It included the world's only woman astronaut, Valentina Tereshkova, who was dressed in a green suit and was at her genial and relaxed best.

Mrs. Trudeau posed for pictures with the astronaut but throughout appeared to be shy and slightly nervous.

Another reception line was formed as the party was to enter the dining room for lunch and Mrs. Trudeau wound up in the line-up along with the wife of Canadian ambassador in Moscow Robert Ford.

Among those presented to her was her own husband. That's when he kissed her.

FIRST MISSION

Later in the afternoon, Mrs. Trudeau carried out her first state mission alone.

She presented copies of Canadian films and recordings to the Palace of Pioneers, a talent development and recreational centre for pioneers who are about Boy Scout and Girl Guide age.

In the evening, she switched from beige to white but stuck to the mid-length in her gown for the special performance of Swan Lake at the Bolshoi Theatre.

In the more formal surroundings of the huge central box the Trudeaus shared with Kosygin and his wife and a party of dignitaries of both nationalities, Mrs. Trudeau looked less vulnerable with the spotlight on the two men.

In fact, she looked no more self-conscious than Kosygin who sat beside her while her husband and Kosygin's wife made a more relaxed pair and were more casual about the sea of staring eyes surrounding them.

KOSTER

General Demoted

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The United States Army demoted a general Wednesday and severely disciplined another for not conducting a proper investigation into the massacre of civilians at My Lai, South Vietnam, three years ago.

Maj.-Gen. Samuel Koster, head of the 11th Infantry Division at the time of the atrocity, was reduced to brigadier-general.

He was also stripped of his Distinguished Service Medal and had a letter of censure placed in his personal file.

Brig.-Gen. George Young, Koster's deputy at the time of the massacre, was also stripped of his Distinguished Service Medal and had a letter of censure placed in his file.

MOSCOW (UPI) — Canada and the Soviet Union signed an agreement today calling for mutual consideration on vital foreign affairs, Canadian officials said.

The Soviet Union and Canada both have similar agreements with other countries. However, this is only the second time the Soviets have signed such an agreement with a non-Communist nation.

"We do not consider it a major breakthrough," one high-ranking Canadian source said. "It is important, but they (the Soviets) are describing it in superlatives."

'SOMETHING GOOD'

"I think that we have done something good today," Premier Kosygin declared.

Canadian sources also said the Soviet leaders called the agreement "historical and monumental."

The document was signed by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin in a special ceremony at a luxurious Lenin Hills reception villa.

In addition to arranging for "regular consultations on important international problems," a key paragraph of the protocol says:

"In the event of a situation arising which, in the opinion of the two governments, endangers the maintenance of peace or involves a breach of the peace, the two governments will make contact without delay in order to exchange views on what might be done to improve the situation."

YEARLY MEETINGS

The text of the protocol said the consultations would be held "every time the need of this shall arise, and in principle once a year at the least."

Other sections of the protocol say the agreements it contains do not affect the obligations of Canada to her NATO agreements or the Soviet Union to its Warsaw Pact requirements.

NEWS BRIEFS

Defeat Acknowledged

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, (D-Wash.), chief senate advocate of reviving the super-sonic transport program, acknowledged defeat today by agreeing that funds voted by the house for the project should be used to end the program instead.

The Senate vote on the SST was not expected until late today.

Lava Pace Quickens

SANT'ALFIO, Sicily (Reuter) — A fiery river of lava, bearing down on this prosperous farming community from Mount Etna, picked up speed during the night and posed a new threat to village homes, police said today.

Street Battles

JERUSALEM (AP) — A hundred Jewish "Black Panthers," charging discrimination against Jewish immigrants from Africa and Asia, fought street battles for six hours Tuesday with police. Ten policemen and several demonstrators were injured in Israel's worst rioting in years.

Canada-USSR Pact Struck

U.S. DEBT 'LOOP' MOON AND BACK

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. national debt is so big that it would make a 35-foot-wide ribbon of dollar bills that would loop around the moon and back.

Or girdle the equator 1,552 times. Or fill 3,456 box cars, enough to make a train 36 miles long. The only problem is that it would take 171 years to print the bills and all 100 U.S. Senators working non-stop for 64 years to count them all out.

Senate appropriations committee chairman Allen Ellender, D-La., brought out the figures in attempting to impress on his colleagues that the "stupendous sum" of the national debt, roughly $14 billion yearly cost of maintaining 300,000 troops in Europe.

Record Crowd Welcomes Team

MONTREAL (UPI) — The largest crowd in the history of Montreal turned out during a victory parade today to welcome back the Montreal Canadiens fresh from clinching the National Hockey League championship over Chicago.

"How nice it is," said team captain Jean Beliveau as he sat in a convertible inching its way down St. Catharines Street toward city hall. "We are very fortunate to win."

Police officially estimated the crowd lining the downtown area of Montreal at between 500,000 and 600,000, a quarter of the city's population, and the largest ever crowd to turn out for a parade.

FINAL GAME

Montreal clinched the Stanley Cup — the top award in professional hockey — Tuesday night when it beat the Chicago Black Hawks in the final contest of seven-game series. (See Page 10 for story.)

As the caravan of convertibles approached city hall for an address by Montreal Mayor Jean Drapeau, a 12-gun salute echoed in their honor.

In the lead car was the Stanley cup.

QUEEN SEEKS PAY HIKE

LONDON (UPI) — In an unprecedented move, Queen Elizabeth today asked her subjects for a pay raise. She did not specify how much.

"Her majesty regrets that developments in intervening years have made that provision inadequate for the maintenance of that standard of service to her people which she believes they wish her and her family to adhere," said the message to the House of Commons asking for a review of the civil list, the official name of the Queen's grant.

MUMMY IS A DADDY according to Dr. N. B. Millet (left), curator of the Royal Ontario Museum's Egyptian department and Bernard Leech of the museum's conservation branch who removed wrappings from the mummy that spent 60 years in a museum coffin listed as a female. The curator became suspicious about the mummy, which dates back to about 1200 B.C. when he found its ears were not pierced. (CP Wirephoto)

INSIDE THE TIMES

Finance Minister Edgar Benson rose to the defence of the Trudeau government's economic policies Tuesday, saying continuing high salary increases are renewing the spectre of galloping inflation and heightening the threat to Canada's economic stability. His remarks in the Commons were aimed at New Democrats who argued Ottawa should spend any money necessary to increase employment, regardless of the inflation threat. See Page 26.

Ottawa fiscal policy came under fire from another quarter as well, as rebel Liberal MP Paul Hellyer, who resigned from the cabinet two years ago, called for mandatory price and wage controls as the only way to get the economy back on the road to full employment while keeping prices in check. See Page 18.

The rebirth of the Sunco Mine at Jordan River has stirred controversy over the mine's application to the Pollution Control Board to dump one million gallons annually of mine tailings into the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

Times Business Editor G. S. Kent surveyed the mine and on Page 9 gives the company's side of the issue — especially plans to meet some of the objections.

Heath Flies to Paris For Crucial ECM Talks

PARIS (UPI) — Prime Minister Edward Heath flew tonight to Paris for two days of talks with French President Georges Pompidou that he predicted would be historic.

At stake was Britain's entry into the European community. British officials described the visit as perhaps the most crucial mission undertaken by a British leader in recent times. They said it could lead to a new phase in Europe's postwar history and Britain's entry into the European Common Market.

British officials described the visit as perhaps the most crucial mission undertaken by a British leader in recent times. They said it could lead to a new phase in Europe's postwar history and Britain's entry into the European Common Market.

Heath landed at Orly Airport where in a statement in French he recalled that it was just 20 years ago that France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, Netherlands and Luxembourg began to pool their coal and steel resources in a move that led to the common market.

"I am convinced that we are living in a historic moment comparable to that 20 years ago," Heath said. "It is certain that the decisions we shall reach in the coming weeks will be decisive for the political future of Europe."

U.S. Rail Strike Ended by Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The giant U.S. rail system began shuffling off effects of a two-day paralysis today and started moving tired commuters to their jobs and materials to factories.

Members of the 13,000-member AFL-CIO Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen, which had immobilized the rail system before Congress broke the coast-to-coast strike by passing legislation Tuesday, began removing pickets from terminals and freight yards shortly after President Nixon signed the law ending the walkout.

Union President C. J. Chamberlain notified strikers shortly before midnight Tuesday night the walkout was over and ordered them back to their jobs.

The Penn Central reported freight trains were rolling again within an hour of Nixon's decree. Other railways said they would resume service as the day progressed.

Labor Secretary James Hodgson said it probably would be 24 hours before full service was in effect, but Chamberlain said restoration "should be well along by morning."

Tighter Control, Easier Access

LIQUOR REFORM CALL

QUEBEC (CP) — New measures to fight underworld control over Quebec's bars and taverns and allow easier access to alcoholic beverages were recommended Tuesday by a royal commission.

The commission recommended that new administrative bodies for liquor and beer sales be independent from the government to avoid political favoritism.

It also suggested sale of beer in supermarkets.

The commission was established in 1968. The commission recommended that all bar employees obtain compulsory work identification cards. Unless those with criminal records could prove they had reformed, they should lose their jobs.

The "real owner" of a bar or hotel, rather than front men, would have to obtain a liquor permit. The applicant would have to provide exact information about himself and all directors of his company.

WOULD AVOID WATER

To avoid watered-down drinks, liquor should be served on request in miniature bottles.

Municipal police throughout the province should be allowed to conduct raids without warrants in cases concerning the distribution of beer and liquor.

The report recommended that the Quebec Liquor Board be abolished and replaced by two separate bodies.

One of these would be an alcoholic beverage control board which would issue licences to sell beer, wine and cider, and would be responsible for the operation of bars and licensed restaurants.

The second body, a Quebec liquor corporation, would sell beer, wines and spirits.

The commission recommended that the legal drink-

Brush Not Answer

TORONTO (C.P.) — A United States dentist says brushing teeth makes them look and feel better but doesn't prevent decay.

Dr. Robert F. Barkley of

Macomb, Ill., told the Ontario Dental Association's annual meeting that the best method to prevent decay is to clean teeth with dental floss and dental sticks to break up sticky masses of bacteria called plaque.

Dr. Barkley said he teaches patients to use the floss — thin nylon string that can be worked between the teeth to scrape off plaque — and the stick-like dental tools to clean their gums "while they watch TV news in the morning."

He said tooth brushes should not be thrown out, however, because they do keep the surface of the teeth clean.

DEAR ABBY...

Wants to Sleep

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN
DEAR ABBY: In all the years I've been reading your column I never have seen this problem discussed:

My children are grown and out of the nest. Two are married and one is away at school. My husband prefers to have his breakfast downtown, so after 24 years of getting up early to prepare breakfast for my family, I am finally able to sleep in the morning.

Now the problem: My friends start calling me at 8:30 a.m. They have nothing to say that could not have waited until noon. They just want to visit.

Once I am awakened, I can't go back to sleep. Also they ask, "Did I wake you up?" When I say yes, they make me feel as though I should apologize for sleeping. (Especially my sister-in-law!) I have been a faithful wife and a good mother, and I am not lazy, so if I want to sleep late, whose business is it but my own?

I would take the telephone off the hook but with aging parents and children away at school I am afraid I might miss an emergency call. Is there a solution? Buckeye Dingaling.

DEAR DING: Yes! Ask each and every early bird caller to please refrain from calling you until noon because you have now earned the right to sleep late and would like to enjoy it. If they "forget," hang up on them. They will soon learn to respect your wishes. (P.S. For openers, clip this, and send it to the worst offender.)

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of the following? A new neighbor invited me and two other neighbor women in for tea. When she telephoned me she said, "Please come for a cup of tea on Friday at 2 p.m. for an hour." (The other women said they had been invited in exactly the same way.)

I arrived promptly at 2 p.m. and the other neighbors were right behind me. We were given a "tour" through the new neighbor's home, after which she served us tea and little cakes. We were visiting and joking and having a lovely time, when all of a sudden an alarm clock went off in the kitchen. Our hostess jumped up and said, "Well, our hour is up! Thank you for coming." Then she handed us our purses and ushered us to the door. Naturally we all left. What do you make of this? Flabbergasted.

DEAR FLABBERGASTED: I think she's one woman who says exactly what she means, and means exactly what she says.

DEAR ABBY: My husband wear a tuxedo. He said he our son's wedding. His reason is that the reception is being held in a "basement." True, it is basement level, but it is

Tot's Dental Plan Supported

TORONTO (C.P.) — The Ontario Dental Association is in full accord with provincial plans to provide dental insurance for children, says the association's secretary-treasurer.

Dr. Kenneth Pownall, in an interview Tuesday at the association's annual meeting, said the dentists suggested the coverage begin with three-year-olds, but beginning at any age up to six would be suitable.

Dr. Pownall, also registrar of the Royal College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario, said there are enough dentists in Ontario to cope with the plan if it begins this fall as Health Minister A. B. R. Lawrence has hinted.

He said Ontario has more than 3,000 dentists and is adding 200 a year, including an influx from Quebec.

Action Focus Of Cub Rally

A commando course, pole-climbing, swinging on ropes from trees were all part of a cub rally held by the Tsartlip district in Saanich's Centennial Park.

The rally was patterned on a recent one attended by Cubs of the Douglas and Juan de Fuca districts.

He has received more than 50 applications from Quebec dentists in recent months seeking the right to practise in Ontario. The reason given by most was that they did not like the political-social climate in Quebec, he said, and education of their children was another area of concern.

A NEW BREED WITH EMPTY WASTE CANS

'Her Garbage is Always Perfect'

By SALLY GLOVER

They call it garbology. It's the art of collecting, separating and recycling garbage.

Webster's and Oxford may not have the word yet but it's an important addition to the vocabulary of several Victorians.

Those who practise garbology even have the city garbage collectors stumped. An average family leaves about two cans, full of "want-nots" per week. What the men in white can't figure out is how a family of nine, at 2580 Bowker, leaves only one-quarter of a can of garbage for sometimes two weeks.

"I'm sure they must think we're starving in here," says Mrs. Peter Henderson, mother of the garbology-practising clan.

"I've been not wasting things for years," she said as she pointed to the panoramic array of separated garbage on the back porch. "I've always taken my left-over fat to the butcher. He adds it to his and his sent to Chemainus and recycled as soap."

Now she takes all her separated garbage to the Gonzales Bay Recycling Group.

"Her garbage is always perfect," says Craig Butler, whose home is the major depot in Gonzales Bay.

Garbage usually has to be re-separated before it's marketed.

Mrs. Henderson keeps her fat drippings in the cooler, boils the meat off the bones and puts them in a plastic container. Aluminum is squashed and neatly stacked in another container, as are tin cans, delisted and flattened with their labels placed in the recyclable paper box. (The Gonzales Bay Recycling Group has just recently found a market of tin cans, shipping them to Tilbury Island on the Fraser River delta island for $10 a ton.)

Her paper, which includes junk mail, paper towels and napkins if not too soiled, cigarette and toothpaste packages and writing paper, she folds and puts in with her tin can label box.

There is still no apparent market for newspaper. The Burnaby recycling plant has broken down island shipment transport until the end of the month.

Egg cartons, corrugated cardboard boxes and magazines can be reused, too. The compost heap receives most of the remaining garbage. Anything that doesn't draw rats and is organic is great, she says.

"It's a matter of five to 10 minutes a day. It's quite automatic and sort of fun. I don't mind being organized and you're not messing around with it, you're getting rid of it in a profitable way."

Mrs. Henderson is quite optimistic about the outcome of the recycling project.

"If it's going to work anywhere, it should be Victoria. There's a common goodness here where everyone knows what's going on. In other areas, people are too worried about keeping their body and soul together."

Separating garbage is enforced in some parts of England and enthusiastic citizens in Berkeley, Calif., have successfully set up a recycling program which will further provide jobs for minority groups. According to an Environment 100 bulletin from the University of Victoria, the Berkeley initiators will not be satisfied until the city establishes a regular recycling program of all wastes.

Gonzales Bay Recycling Group has 20 depots throughout the city. They consist of a large wooden lidded box simply a storage spot for neighbors to place their separated garbage.

The major problem is space.

There isn't much, and what there is now, is getting crowded.

Contents of each depot box is brought to Butler's front yard. His garage is full. As tin cans are only marketable by the ton, a storehouse of some kind is needed.

"We're trying to make this as much a community effort as possible," says John Seville, co-ordinator of the group.

And why this zest for the possibilities garbage offers? The garbologists say Canadians waste too much and their resources are running out. So, recycle.

SO WHY JOIN?

The Tiniest Man May Be a Giant

An organization to be called Five And Under will shortly burst upon the Victorian scene unless, as I sincerely hope, my earnest efforts to kill it in the bud bear fruit — as me Irish Uncle Tim would put it.

The two founders of Five And Under, personable young men infectious with enthusiasm over their concept, vectored on my desk yesterday in the interests of testing their brain-storm with some advance publicity. I did my Red Baron best to shoot the whole idea down in flames, but they left unscorched and I've no doubt you'll be hearing more about it in the days ahead.

The idea is simply to form a club of men and women whose height measures five feet or less "to encourage the small people to help each other in different ways." The main function will be the holding of dances, outings and other social events where boy member may meet girl member more or less eye-to-eye rather than eye-to-navel.

Both my visitors — one four-foot-ten, the other four-foot-eight — conceded, willingly enough, that the club will benefit and appeal mainly to males.

The age-old problem of the girl who wants a man she can look up to, in the physical sense, has taken on panic proportions, it would appear, in a time when so many young women might qualify as centre-forwards with the New York Knicks. "The diminutive girls are out there somewhere," one of my visitors said, "but the problem is to find them. Five and Under may be the answer."

This is, I suppose, a legitimate reason to incorporate, though I dare say everyone could cite at least one case where a superior woman has had the intelligence to select a mate regardless of his in-seam measurement.

The most spectacular example that comes to mind was the choice made by my friend Evelyn West, who stands exactly six gorgeous feet in her nylon. Miss West, variously known in her working days as "The Hubba Hubba Girl" and "The Eye-Full Tower," whose most prominent assets were insured by Lloyd's for exactly one million dollars (half a million each), fell in love with a Lilliputian appearing on the same bill, an exquisite little man whose wit and charm made him seem many times larger than life. Incredibly, they were a handsome couple at the wedding where, when asked how it had all come about, the mischievous groom replied, "Somebody put me up to it."

Another longtime friend of mine, Ronald Street, a British-born entertainer who is three-foot-six and billed as "The Cheeky Chap," also took as his bride a dear girl who towered over him and sired a brood of a boy named Danny Lee who now, at 16 is nearly twice as tall as his tiny dad, but knows who's boss.

Ronnie would be the first to spurn an organization of little people. In a world of giants he found his own stature and became a bigger man than many who loom above him.

My visitors made it clear that they are very often sensitive about their nearness to the ground and voiced the wistful hope that, like the members of equally daft organizations of tall people, they might be more at ease with people at their own altitude. It was this, in fact, that had brought them together and the point would have to be conceded that, in tandem, their shortness was apparent.

But the question that immediately occurred to me was this: where do you draw the line in arbitrarily seeking out companions with such a common denominator? If organizations of the very tall or the very short are to become a vogue then why not organizations of people with prematurely grey hair or large noses or jug ears or knock knees?

It seems more likely to me that any such voluntary grouping would only serve to emphasize the handicap, if such it is. I do not wish to join an organization of people with large noses, though I would automatically make it unanimously as president, because I do not care to admit that it is a disability. If I were four feet high I would not seek the company of other men four feet high and thus concede that it is a liability, which it need not be.

Shortness, indeed, is more often an asset since it almost always causes a compensating aggressiveness. Napoleon, Alexander the Great, and Richard the Lion-Hearted were the classic cases, but look at a man like Mickey Rooney who made it to the altar with seven brides, not one of whom cared a wit that he had trouble reaching the high shelves.

The truth is I'm an anti-organization man all the way down the line. I oppose racial or religious organizations in which the members are really trying to escape in the protective coloring of their fellows. I oppose organizations that put up any kind of barriers or which come into existence merely because their membership shares an irritation or a fad. I am cool to the Junior League, all Caledonian societies, all businessmen's service clubs, all groups which put up walls of limiting interests and aims.

I've never been a joiner simply because the things I'm asked to join are almost always insular. When B'nai B'rith opens its membership to the MacTavishes and the St. Andrew's Society opens its membership to the Cohens then I may think of belonging.

When the four-foot-three people meet in one hall and the six-foot-seven people meet in another, it seems to me, they're isolating themselves into boxes in a society already far too compartmentalized. No "Hubba Hubba Girl" awaits the little men in Five And Under.

Gov't Prepares For Evictions At Rest Homes

By DON VIPOND

Emergency plans have been made by the provincial government and local hospitals in case rest home operators carry through their threat to evict welfare patients.

And John Hanrahan of Victoria, vice-president of the B.C. Rest Home Association, said today the evictions "will soon be taking place."

He had said earlier the provincial government would receive no further warning of when but added today the association believes the government "has made some arrangements."

The association meets in Vancouver tonight to consider the next move in its fight with the province over grants paid by government to rest home operators for welfare patient care.

Well over 300 people in Greater Victoria rest homes would be involved if there was a mass eviction of welfare cases.

While details on what the province would do were sketchy this morning, it's understood they would involve the Emergency Measures Organization if necessary and emergency accommodation, possibly in public buildings.

But first, would come medical screening of those evicted to see which ones qualified for hospitalization.

MAY USE LOBBY

Dr. Emert Van Tilburg, executive director at St. Joseph's Hospital, said today cases directed to the hospital will be received on the same priority basis as other patients.

They will be examined and if they don't need hospital care, they won't be admitted. If necessary the hospital will establish a receiving area, possibly in the lobby, as it would in the event of any disaster, where cases could emergency basis

he screened, examined and tagged.

If it has to be, the hospital could accommodate people on an emergency basis in sun-rooms, glassrooms and conference rooms.

Van Tilburg estimated St. Joseph's might be able to handle 50 people for a brief time on that basis if the need was desperate enough.

The problem is, he said, the hospitals have no idea of how many rest home cases might prove in need of hospital care. While guests in rest homes would not normally be hospital cases, the acute bed shortage in nursing homes has tended to force more, ill people into rest homes.

St. Joseph's already has about 30 patients who should be cared for elsewhere but no other accommodation is available, he said.

As for any rest home cases directed to the hospital but not sick enough to be admitted, they would have to be turned over to the civil defence organization and it would be up to the provincial government to take care of them, he added.

Dr. A. C. Piekles, executive director at Royal Jubilee Hospital, said the same admitting priority based on need would prevail there.

If a large number of people were "dumped" on the hospital lavans, he said, he would have to declare a state of emergency.

PROVINCE GIVES MEAGRE AID

Rest home welfare patients on pension cost the provincial government about $5.25 a month, according to Victoria welfare department accounts.

This is because most pensioners in rest homes receive $135 a month from the federal government, the maximum pension. The province pays $150 a month for welfare patients in rest homes.

Pensioners in Victoria rest homes turn their cheques over to the homes operators who then bill city welfare for the pension and the $150.

In most cases this is only $15.

Under the federal welfare cost-sharing plan, the province pays 35 per cent of this amount.

In the case of rest homes, this would be about $5.25 if the bill to city welfare is $15. The rest of the money is divided between the federal government and municipal governments.

If a pensioner receives less than $135 a month from Ottawa, the provincial share would, of course, be proportionately greater. But it still would be only 35 per cent of the difference between the pension and the provincial rate of $150.

Blood-Donor Goal Missed

Victorians gave 190 pints of blood, 60 short of the 250-pint goal, during the Red Cross blood drive Monday and Tuesday.

The next blood drive will be Monday, May 31, from 2 to 4 p.m. at Royal Roads Military College.

The drive is open to residents in the Royal Roads vicinity.

Hospital Wants Union Decertified

The administrator of Sandringham Private Hospital has applied to the B.C. Labor Relations Board to decertify the union which has been on strike for 232 days in a bid for a first contract.

Mrs. Margaret Reynolds, the administrator, said it has been more than 10 months since the Canadian Union of Public Employees was certified "and the law says if there is no contract within 10 months, application can be made for decertification."

Union representative Alex Markides said the move is "a frivolous request" without rhyme or reason.

It is expected to be several weeks before the B.C. Labor Relations Board makes its decision.

Museum Grabs Collection Of Old Household Objects

The Provincial Museum has paid $25,000 for the entire collection of late 19th and early 20th century historical objects from a private museum near Ladysmith.

The collection was owned by 61-year-old John Watson, operator of the Crossroad Museum.

History curator Dan Gallagher said 15,000 objects were involved in the purchase deal.

"There are mostly household items, but the collection also includes a Model T truck and a threshing machine," he said. "The great weight of the objects were in use between 1890 and 1921."

The bulk of the items will be used in a museum in the historic display now under construction.

"We were lucky to get this collection," he said. "They were mostly collected on Vancouver Island."

The historic household goods are in the process of being packed by a group of volunteers for shipment to a hangar at Patricia Bay where they will be stored.

The items will then be taken in relay's to the museum for illumination before display.

Volunteers will catalogue the items this summer.

POWER KNOCKED OUT IN LANGFORD

Westerly winds for 39 miles per hour knocked out power in part of Langford this morning when branches fell on a line at Rowles Crescent.

Power was out between 6:45 a.m. and 7:10 a.m. a B.C. Hydro spokesman said today.

"A ridge of high pressure off the west coast of Vancouver Island created the wind which is expected to decrease to 29 tonight."

The system will bring mainly sunny and warmer weather for the next two days, the weather office at Victoria International Airport said.

SHIP MOVEMENTS

NAVY
Endeavour at sea, returning May 21; St. Croix and Columbia at sea, return date not listed; Cowichan and Miramichi at Comox; Yukon in Naden drydock, all other ships in port.

LAST SATURDAY MORNING, an outdoor-minded Victorian loaded a bunch of kids into his station wagon and took off for an overnight camping trip. He didn't have a campfire permit when he set out. Nor was he in possession of one when he arrived home Sunday, a frustrated and angry man.

Among his blunt-spoken remarks was a warning which I hope our provincial department of lands and forests will heed:

"A long weekend is coming up. People by the thousands will be getting outdoors. They're going to take it for granted that someone, somewhere, will write them out campfire permits on request. If somebody isn't equipped to do so, a lot of citizens will be lighting illegal fires all over the place."

His was but one of a number of calls I've received since B.C. Forest Service announced a change in policy under which permits would be available only on a trip basis at ranger stations during business hours, and from a limited number of special outlets elsewhere.

In sum, these calls point up a situation which I find nothing less than ridiculous. First, only a small and lucky minority of campers is able to shove off for favored locations in business hours.

And second, that list of special outlets should have been in hand long before another fire season was upon us.

This situation needs correcting. I suggest it could best be put to rights by a speedy return to the season permit.

Meanwhile, if you plan to leave Victoria on a long-weekend excursion that may call for the lighting of an open fire, here are a few points to remember.

You can permit an open fire without a permit in the camping area of any supervised provincial park.

Elsewhere, and with due regard for special municipal fire regulations, a permit is required.

Try Forest Service headquarters (protection branch); Langford ranger station at 697 Goldstream; RCMP stations at Colwood or Sooke; or the department of travel industry, Dogwood Building, 1019 Wharf Street.

School boards in ho-hum session have a way of dredging one or other of education's more durable chestnuts from the barrel. One of these is corporal punishment in the schools. In other words, The Strap.

I gather from the news that

Greater Victoria School Board gave strapping a go-round at its Monday evening session. Good enough; but I wish that child psychiatrist Dr. Philip Ney hadn't chosen to make the teacher the villain of his presentation.

I don't like to take issue with anyone in Ney's profession. To do so makes me acutely aware of my own squirming little neuroses. Nevertheless, when Dr. Ney suggests that the teacher should substitute a punching bag in the staff room for student flesh, I think he is talking pure piffle.

There may be rare teachers who like to lay on the strap. But the vast majority don't, and if they resort to strapping at all, do so only when other collective procedures have drawn a blank.

Talks with parents, for instance. Attempts to persuade the determined classroom disrupter into a change of attitude, or to channel his aggression into activities that will give it scope: Detentions. Perhaps a cooling-off period of exile from the arena.

Sometimes one or other of these methods does the trick. But by no means always and here we come to what the teacher should have in the staffroom.

Not a punching bag but a psychiatrist, ready and able to go to work on child problems with which no teacher can or should be expected to cope.

It would also be necessary for the psychiatrist to do what he can with those parents who expect the school to magic the product of their failures and mistakes into a responsible human being.

That would take a lot of time, and no end of money. It's so much cheaper and easier to damn the teacher.

Final Uvic Marks Ready for Mailing

University of Victoria students who are getting short on fingernails can start relaxing. Their final marks for the past school year are almost on the way.

Uvic registrar Ron Ferry said today a meeting of the university senate tonight will approve the marks.

"Marks of the graduating class will be mailed out after the meeting," he said. "We'll start mailing the others tomorrow."

Ferry said it was standard practice to mail graduates' marks first, with undergraduates getting theirs later.

He said he expected the last of the marks to be received by students next week.

'Last' Island N-Test

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. Atomic Energy Commission's five-megaton weapons test this fall will be its last on Alaska's Amchitka Island, suggesting that the "Cannikin" test is the only underground weapons test the United States plans in the multi-megaton range.

"After the successful completion of Cannikin the AEC intends to vacate Amchitka," the AEC says in the draft of a 40-page environmental statement to the White House. "Beyond successful completion of Cannikin, the AEC does not have any plans for future underground nuclear testing on Amchitka, although this does not preclude such plans should a future need arise."

ONLY ONE

Scheduled for the first week of October, Cannikin is understood to be a test of an enlarged version of the warhead for the Spartan ABM missile. The fact that the AEC plans only one such test raises several questions about future testing plans and the size of Spartan warheads.

Cannikin is being conducted in Alaska because Amchitka is the only place the AEC feels it can safely detonate weapons as large as five megatons. Its regular testing grounds in Nevada are too close to Reno, Las Vegas and Salt Lake City to test weapons larger than one or two megatons.

KILL WILDLIFE

In the drafted version of its environmental report, the AEC denies Cannikin will trigger large secondary earthquakes or submarine tidal waves but does admit that it will damage the 42-mile-long island and possibly kill off some of its wildlife.

The most controversial part of the environmental statement is sure to be the AEC's discussion of how much radiation will leak from the test site into the ocean, and when this leakage will take place.

Most likely, the AEC claims, ground water contaminated by radiation will take 1,000 years to find its way into the Bering Sea, by which time the radioactivity will have been largely dissipated.

RADIATED WATER

A second and "less probable" mechanism, the AEC says, will release the radiated water to the sea in 100 years, and a third mechanism, which the AEC says is "very unlikely," will discharge contaminated water into the sea three years after the test.

If this takes place, the AEC concedes, radiated water will be discharged from the test site into the ocean for the next 120 years. The water would be 1,200 times more radioactive at the time of its first discharge than water containing the maximum safe concentrations of radiation.

The worst damage Cannikin will do to Amchitka, the AEC said, will be to leave a "subsidence crater" above the explosion site that is 16 to 100 feet deep and as much as 4,000 feet across.

TRUDEAU'S MEET, KISS AT RECEPTION

'Pierre, This is Margaret!'

By JOHN MIKA

MOSCOW — Prime Minister Trudeau shook hands with his wife Margaret when they unexpectedly met in a receiving line between functions inside the Kremlin Tuesday — and then he leaned over and kissed her.

MIDI STYLE

It was a welcome bit of reassurance for the host's array of luminaries at a pre-luncheon reception. It included the world's only woman astronaut, Valentina Tereshkova, who was dressed in a green suit and wives tense but trying hard.

In a beige midi dress, she went to the Kremlin for a 1½-hour luncheon thrown by Soviet Prime Minister Alexei Kosygin for the Trudeau and team of Canadian officials involved in the first session of talks between the two leaders that morning.

She was introduced, along with the other Canadian VIPs, to the host's array of luminaries at a pre-luncheon reception. It included the world's only woman astronaut, Valentina Tereshkova, who was dressed in a green suit and was at her genial and relaxed best.

Mrs. Trudeau posed for pictures with the astronaut but throughout appeared to be shy and slightly nervous.

Another reception line was formed as the party was to enter the dining room for lunch and Mrs. Trudeau wound up in the line-up along with the wife of Canadian ambassador in Moscow Robert Ford.

Among those presented to her was her own husband. That's when he kissed her.

FIRST MISSION

Later in the afternoon, Mrs. Trudeau carried out her first state mission alone.

She presented copies of Canadian films and recordings to the Palace of Pioneers, a talent development and recreational centre for pioneers who are about Boy Scout and Girl Guide age.

In the evening, she switched from beige to white but stuck to the midi length in her gown for the special performance of Swan Lake at the Bolshoi Theatre.

In the more formal surroundings of the huge central box the Trudeaus shared with Kosygin and his wife and a party of dignitaries of both nationalities, Mrs. Trudeau looked less vulnerable to the spotlight on the two men.

In fact, she looked no more self-conscious than Kosygin who sat beside her while her husband and Kosygin's wife made a more relaxed pair and were more casual about the sea of staring eyes surrounding them.

General Demoted

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — The United States Army demoted a general Wednesday and severely disciplined another for not conducting a proper investigation into the massacre of civilians at My Lai, South Vietnam, three years ago.

Maj.-Gen. Samuel Koster, head of the 11th Infantry Division at the time of the atrocity, was reduced to brigadier-general.

He was also stripped of his Distinguished Service Medal and had a letter of censure placed in his personal file.

Brig.-Gen. George Young, Koster's deputy at the time of the massacre, was also stripped of his Distinguished Service Medal and had a letter of censure placed in his file.

MOSCOW (UPI) — Canada and the Soviet Union signed an agreement today calling for mutual consideration on vital foreign affairs, Canadian officials said.

The Soviet Union and Canada both have similar agreements with other countries. However, this is only the second time the Soviets have signed such an agreement with a non-Communist nation. "We do not consider it a major breakthrough," one high-ranking Canadian source said. "It is important, but they (the Soviets) are describing it in superlatives."

'SOMETHING GOOD'

"I think that we have done something good today," Premier Alexei Kosygin declared.

Canadian sources also said the Soviet leaders called the agreement "historical and monumental."

The document was signed by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and Kosygin in a special ceremony at a luxurious Lenin Hills reception villa.

In addition to arranging for "regular consultations on important international problems," a key paragraph of the protocol says:

"In the event of a situation arising which, in the opinion of the two governments, endangers the maintenance of peace or involves a breach of the peace, the two governments will make contact without delay in order to exchange views on what might be done to improve the situation."

YEARLY MEETINGS

The text of the protocol said the consultations would be held "every time the need of this shall arise, and in principle once a year at the least."

Other sections of the protocol say the agreements it contains do not affect the obligations of Canada to her NATO agreements or the Soviet Union to its Warsaw Pact requirements.

Defeat Admitted

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Sen. Warren G. Magnuson, (D-Wash.), chief Senate advocate of reviving the supersonic transport program, acknowledged defeat today by agreeing that funds voted by the House for the project should be used to end the program instead.

The Senate vote on the SST was not expected until late today.

First Round to Nixon In Troop Cut Fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's forces scored a decisive victory Wednesday in rejecting the first in a series of Senate proposals to cut United States forces in Europe.

By an unexpectedly large margin of 63 to 26, the Senate defeated a proposal by Senator Gaylord Nelson (Dem. Wis.) for a phased 50-per-cent cut of the 300,000 U.S. troops over a three-year period unless East-West talks start promptly on the possibility of mutual withdrawals.

The heavy vote underscored the view of White House backers that while he was able to block all moves for a unilateral U.S. troop reduction.

U.S. Rail Strike Ended by Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The giant U.S. rail system began shrugging off effects of a two-day paralysis today and started moving tired commuters to their jobs and materials to factories.

Members of the 13,000-member AFL-CIO Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen, which had immobilized the rail system before Congress broke the coast-to-coast strike by passing legislation Tuesday, began removing pickets from terminals and freight yards shortly after President Nixon signed the law ending the walkout.

Union President C. J. Chamberlain notified strikers shortly before midnight Tuesday night the walkout was over and ordered them back to their jobs.

The Penn Central reported freight trains were rolling again within an hour of Nixon's decree. Other railroads said they would resume service as the day progressed.

Labor Secretary James Hodgson said it probably would be 24 hours before full service was in effect, but Chamberlain said restoration "should be well along by morning."

Tighter Control, Easier Access

LIQUOR REFORM CALL

QUEBEC (CP) — New measures to fight underworld control over Quebec's bars and taverns and allow easier access to alcoholic beverages were recommended Tuesday by a royal commission.

The commission recommended that new administrative bodies for liquor and beer sales be independent from the government to avoid political favoritism.

It also suggested sale of beer in supermarkets.

The commission was established in 1968. The commission recommended that all bar employees obtain compulsory work identification cards. Unless those with criminal records could prove they had reformed, they should lose their jobs.

The "real owner" of a bar or hotel, rather than front men, would have to obtain a liquor permit. The applicant would have to provide exact information about himself and all directors of his company.

WOULD AVOID WATER

To avoid watered-down drinks, liquor should be served, on request, in miniature bottles.

Municipal police throughout the province should be allowed to conduct raids without warrants in cases concerning the distribution of beer and liquor.

The report recommended that the Quebec Liquor Board be abolished and replaced by two separate bodies.

One of these would be an alcoholic beverage control board which would issue licences to sell beer, wine and cider, and would be responsible for the operation of bars and licensed restaurants.

The second body, a Quebec liquor corporation, would sell beer, wines and spirits.

The commission recommended that the legal drinking age be raised to 21.

U.S. DEBT 'LOOP' MOON AND BACK

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. national debt is so big that it would make a 35-foot-wide ribbon of dollar bills that would loop around the moon and back.

Or girdle the equator 1,552 times. Or fill 3,456 box cars, enough to make a train 36 miles long. The only problem is that it would take 171 years to print the bills and all 100 U.S. Senators working non-stop for 64 years to count them all out.

Senate appropriations committee chairman Allen Ellender, D-La., brought out the figures in attempting to impress on his colleagues that the "stupendous sum" of the national debt, roughly $400 billion, should be reason enough to cut the $14 billion yearly, far exceeded the cost of maintaining 300,000 troops in Europe.

Record Crowd Welcomes Team

MONTREAL (UPI) — The largest crowd in the history of Montreal turned out during a victory parade today to welcome back the Montreal Canadiens fresh from clinching the National Hockey League championship over Chicago.

"How nice it is," said team captain Jean Beliveau as he sat in a convertible inching its way down St. Catharines Street toward city hall. "We are very fortunate to win."

Police officially estimated the crowd lining the downtown area of Montreal at between 500,000 and 600,000, a quarter of the city's population, and the largest ever crowd to turn out for a parade.

FINAL GAME

Montreal clinched the Stanley Cup — the top award in professional hockey — Tuesday night when it beat the Chicago Black Hawks in the final contest of seven-game series. (See Page 10 for story.)

As the caravan of convertibles approached city hall for an address by Montreal Mayor Jean Drapeau, a 12-gun salute echoed in their honor. In the lead car was the Stanley cup.

During the three-mile trip from the Montreal Forum to city hall, well wishers lined 10 deep at places on the way.

Thousands of spectators crashed through police barricades bringing the procession almost to a standstill. Little girls and boys, perched on their parents' shoulders, waved hockey pennants and employees of office buildings on the parade route threw out toilet paper as impromptu streamers.

QUEEN SEEKS PAY HIKE

LONDON (UPI) — In an unprecedented move, Queen Elizabeth today asked her subjects for a pay raise. She did not specify how much.

"Her majesty regrets that developments in intervening years have made that provision inadequate for the maintenance of that standard of service to her people which she believes they wish her and her family to adhere," said the message to the House of Commons asking for a review of the civil list, the official name of the Queen's grant.

"MUMMY IS A DADDY according to Dr. N. B. Millet (left), curator of the Royal Ontario Museum's Egyptian department and Bernard Leach of the museum's conservation branch who removed wrappings from the mummy that spent 60 years in a museum coffin listed as a female. The curator became suspicious about the mummy, which dates back to about 1200 B.C. when he found its ears were not pierced. (CP Wirephoto)
